second best on the Oregon squad.

Although this is the first time he has qualified for the NCAA wrestling tournament, the trip to Iowa will not be the first NCAA post-season action for Anderson. Anderson was a lineman on the 1990-91 Oregon football team that played in the Freedom Bowl.

Anderson, whose hometown is Turner, Ore., said qualifying for the NCAA wrestling tournament was personally more rewarding than appearing in a bowl game.

"Wrestling is an individual sport. Qualifying for the NCAA tournament is something you know you did on your own," Anderson said. "In football, you can go even if you didn't do anything because it's the whole team that matters."

Anderson said wrestling is more demanding than football.

"In football, you go all out for about a total of seven minutes during a game, but you have time to rest after every play," Anderson said. "In wrestling, you have to go all out for seven minutes straight. You have to be in a lot better shape to wrestle."

Anderson wouldn't mind meeting his conference rival, Cal-Poly San Luis Obispo's Seth Woodill, at the NCAA tournament. Woodill had defeated Anderson for the conference title.

"I feel that I'm in better shape than he is," Anderson said. "If I get another chance at him, I'm just going to keep attacking."
