have little effect on the University, said Chris Ramey, an architect with the University Planning office.

"We at the University feel we're one of the leaders of transportation, in promotion and utilization of alternative modes," Ramey said.

The University already did many of the things mentioned in the amendments, he said.

These included the Lane Transit District ridership program for University students and faculty, the present transit station on University property, and another proposed transit station to be built in conjunction with covered bicycle parking.

Ramey also said the University

'Only a bike rider knows about the problems of riding bikes.'

associate city planner

ty has spent "a considerable amount of money on bicycle improvement," including bicycle lockers, paths and covered racks.

"We're ahead of the curve," he said. "We do almost everything the code expects already."

Ramey said he would like to see the city develop a comprehensive plan including the University that addresses "outdated parking requirements."

ACLU likely to challenge anti-gay rights initiatives

NORTHWEST

BEND (AP) — The American Civil Liberties Union says it probably will challenge the constitutionality of an anti-gay rights initiative in communities that endorse it in local elections across the state.

More than a dozen Oregon cities or counties are considering the anti-gay rights amendment in local elections in June. More cities and counties may offer the initiative in local September elections.

Dock Kerbow, chief petitioner for the initiative, said the measure's supporters will continue to push for its approval.

The Oregon Citizens Alliance sponsored the local initiatives, which would deny minority status for homosexuals. The OCA had targeted 25 cities and eight counties to revive toned-down versions of the measure at the local level, where the group hoped conservative rural voters would give the measures a better chance of passing.

STREETWISE

QUESTION:

If you were an IFC member, would you go to the meetings?

"Only if they had a cocktail waitress to serve drinks."

JAKE PANOWICZ
junior, journalism

"I don't know anything about the IFC. I try to stay away from it because I heard the IFC was full of idiots."

RICHARD JOHNSTON
senior, history

"I would go if they gave me something to eat — like one of those Burger King meatloaf dinner baskets."

LISA HARRELL
junior, romance languages

"Of course I would. If it had to do with fees I would show up and try to lower them."

BRIAN LEE
junior, business

"Of course I would go. It seems like you don't care if you don't show up."

SERRINA STIERLIN
junior, CIS

"If I was elected for that reason, I would have to attend."
