

Suspect surrenders after 20 years

NATIONAL

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — Twenty years ago a band of would-be revolutionaries botched a bank holdup and left a bloody trail as they disappeared into Cuba on a hijacked jetliner. The last of the four suspects surrendered Wednesday.

William White Graham, 38, was arrested about 2 p.m. as he stepped off a flight from Miami at Washington National Airport, U.S. Attorney Kenneth Melson said.

"He just decided it was time," Arlington County police Detective Steve Carter said.

Graham had been living in the San Francisco Bay area for about five years and was married to a woman who lived in Miami, said FBI Special Agent Howard Luker. Graham used the name John Morgan Richardson and worked in the computer field, Luker said.

Graham had returned to the United States in the mid- to late 1970s, Luker said. He would not say where Graham had lived before arriving in San Francisco.

Graham's lawyer contacted the FBI early this week to say that Graham was considering turning himself in, Luker said. Luker said he felt "shock, astonishment and every other type of emotion" when he received the call.

The arrest closes a case that has haunted Arlington police since October 1972, when an off-duty police officer and a bank manager were gunned down in the foiled robbery.

Days later an airline ticket agent was shot to death as the fugitives hijacked an Eastern Airlines jet from Houston Intercontinental Airport and forced the pilot to fly to Havana.

The other three suspects, Charles Tuller and his two sons, Bryce and Jonathan, were arrested shortly after they returned from Cuba in 1975.

But Graham remained behind, and Cuban officials refused to extradite him. In 1975, he said in a newspaper interview that he had enrolled in the University of Havana.

Luker said that Graham indicated "that he is extremely relieved that this is all over with." Graham was influenced to turn himself in by pressure put on his family by investigators, Luker said. He said the FBI was investigating whether family members might have helped Graham elude capture.

IRS offers last minute tax filing advice

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a midnight deadline approaching, the IRS offered some final guidance today to as many as 25 million couples and individuals who don't believe in filing their tax returns early.

The first rule: Don't panic. Second, don't think an innovative excuse will get you off the hook for failing to file. The Internal Revenue Service has heard them all.

There was the certified public accountant in Dallas who didn't file for two years, claiming he couldn't find any forms. Another Texan skipped filing for several years and, when pressed by the IRS, demanded: "Didn't you get my death certificate? I mailed it to you."

Many IRS offices and postal stations around the country planned late hours tonight to accommodate procrastinators and those who simply don't want to hand over their money a minute too soon.

In most big cities the plans were similar: IRS workers and volunteers available to answer last-minute questions and postal workers standing at curbside to receive returns. In Milwaukee, the IRS and a radio station were teaming up for festivities that include a dunk-the-taxman opportunity for harried taxpayers. Proceeds will go to reduce the federal deficit.

The IRS, which is on a campaign to treat taxpayers like paying customers, offered three major new wrinkles this tax season:

- A person who is unable to complete a return by the deadline may gain a four-month extension, to Aug. 16, by filing Form 4868. The big deal this year is that no failure-to-file penalty will be assessed even if 4868 is not accompanied by a check for the balance owed. Note Form 4868, printed months ago, still says you must send a check; that is outdated.

There still could be penalty and interest of 13 percent on the balance.

- The IRS is pushing its installment payment plan for those who file but can't afford to pay all that is owed. The taxpayer can suggest a payment plan by attaching Form 9465 or a handwritten note to the return; the tax agency will say within 30 days whether the offer is acceptable.

- People who have failed to file returns in the past — costing the treasury at least $7 billion a year — were offered almost no-questions-asked treatment if they confessed and arranged to pay before the IRS contacted them.
