

We need: Creative Dedicated Motivated Outgoing Organized Persuasive Smiling Advertising Sales Representatives...

The Oregon Daily Emerald is currently accepting applications for advertising sales people to begin training now for work this summer and/or next fall. The rewards are many. You will gain experience in sales, layout, design, advertising production and business communications, along with many other fringe benefits.

We must be honest and let you know this job is not for everyone. It is highly demanding, stressful and requires a great deal of your time. You can expect to work anywhere from 25 to 35 hours per week and will be responsible for meeting monthly personal as well as organizational goals. You must be prepared to take constructive criticism and work competitively with others. If you have an impossible class load or are involved with extra-curricular activities, this job is not for you.

However, if you have a sense of pride in doing a good job, are creatively inclined, not afraid to work on straight commission and want to service an average of 25-35 local businesses, as well as maintain a normal class load and of course your social life, this may be the job for you. If you enjoy a challenge, don't need anyone to get you up in the morning and operate well under pressure, attend our informational meeting on Tuesday, May 11, 3:30-4:30 pm in the EMU Board Room, 3rd floor of the Erb Memorial Union. Please stop by and pick up an advance application in room 300 EMU, complete it, then bring it along with you to this meeting.

Freshmen, sophomores and juniors majoring in Journalism, Advertising, Business or Marketing are especially welcome. You must be able to work at least one full academic year (excluding summer) to be considered. You must have reliable transportation before you begin the position (sorry, mopeds, motorcycles & bicycles are not acceptable).

Boston star's career may be over

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Celtics star Reggie Lewis was diagnosed with potentially life-threatening heart problems Monday that in all likelihood will end his career.

Celtics team physician Dr. Arnold Scheller said it was a "strong probability" Lewis will have to give up basketball. Lewis, against the team's wishes, has sought a second opinion at another hospital.

Scheller did hold out some hope that Lewis' condition could improve to the point where he could resume playing.

"I'm probably one of the most optimistic people you'll ever meet," he said. "With modern technology there may be changes, but it would have to be controlled with medication and other things."

Scheller said Lewis, 27, "dodged a bullet" when he collapsed during a game last week.

In an interview with broadcast stations Monday, Scheller said he told Lewis, "This is serious. You can die from this."

Scheller said Lewis apparently had the same ailment that killed Hank Gathers, a player for Loyola Marymount who collapsed during a game March 4, 1990 and died within two hours.

An autopsy determined Gathers died of cardiomyopathy, a condition that damages an area of heart tissue and can cause it to beat irregularly.

Peter Roisman, Lewis' agent, said tests begun Monday on Lewis at Brigham and Women's Hospital will continue over the next several days. He said Lewis is "comfortable, in stable condition and in good spirits."

The Celtics captain and leading scorer left New England Baptist Hospital, where his heart problems had been diagnosed, about 11:30 p.m. EDT Sunday.

"For whatever reason, he chose to seek a second opinion," hospital spokesman Jim Rattray said Monday. He added that Lewis took such action against the advice of the Celtics, Scheller and other doctors who treated him.

Calls to Lewis at Brigham and Women's were not forwarded.

"I'm just out to get some fresh air," Lewis said as he was leaving New England Baptist, the Boston Globe reported. "The treatment's great. The treatment's just tremendous."

Dave Gavitt, the Celtics senior executive vice president, spoke with Lewis by telephone shortly before he left New England Baptist. Gavitt said, "The big thing is to really pin down what the problem is and get him well."

Lewis collapsed midway through the first quarter of Boston's playoff opener against the Charlotte Hornets.

Whoever emerges from that series will probably meet the Knicks in what should be one of the greatest Conference finals ever. There is no love lost between the top three teams in the East, and that should lead to a terrific couple of series. However, all of this speculation about future matchups is premature; just ask the Suns.

Blazing Along: All of a sudden the forgotten team in the West, the Portland Trail Blazers, is looking like a possible title contender again. The Blazers, who were considered also-rans just a few weeks ago, have more playoff experience than the rest of the conference, and their trip to the finals is being made easier every day.

Portland lost at home to San Antonio, but these two teams are so evenly matched that home court does not matter much. Expect this series to go five brutal games, with each game coming down to the end. If Portland could beat the Spurs, and the Lakers do the same to the Suns, Portland would get home-court advantage in the second round against the No. 8 team in the conference, a scenario that no No. 4 team has been blessed with before.

Portland should beat the Lakers, a team that no longer has the Blazers psyched out like they did in the 1980s. The Western Conference finals would then boil down to the experienced Blazers against either the inexperienced Rockets, Sonics and Clippers or the Jazz, a perennial playoff bust.

Of course, it doesn't really matter because if the Blazers did make the finals, they would lose to the Eastern Conference representative and find themselves being considered among teams like the Denver Broncos and Buffalo Bills, who cannot win the big game.

Once again, however, all this speculation is useless; just ask the Suns.
