QUESTION:

Who is the hottest kid on Beverly Hills 90210?

"I've only watched it a couple of times and I think it's a disgusting television show, and I can't understand why anyone watches it."

JUSTIN DELACOUR
sophomore, journalism

"David. He's more of a high-schooler because he's a weasel. The other guys are flakes and look like they are 30."

RICH MCPHERSON
sophomore, undecided

"Brandon because he has dimples and straight teeth."

NICOLE CONRAD
freshman, music

"Dylan. I don't watch the show much, but I would have to say he's the hottest."

ERIK MICHAELSEN
junior, english

"There aren't any. None of those guys are hot. Melrose Place is a different story."

FAYE HIRSCHHORN

"I don't like any of them. They all kind of let me down."

CINDY GREEN

Grizzly bear a trouble-maker

GRANTS PASS (AP) — An escaped grizzly bear that has eluded game officials for five days has been located under thick brush, but authorities said Sunday they had to wait for the bear to emerge to capture it.

Two men equipped with night-vision goggles sat in trees baited with a carcass Saturday night in hopes of shooting the bear with a tranquilizer dart if it showed up to eat, said Dave Siddon, founder of the Wildlife Images animal rehabilitation center.

Government trackers pinned down the small area of heavy brush and marsh concealing the bear Saturday.

"We have tracks going into the brush, but no tracks going out," Siddon said Sunday afternoon.

Siddon said it was best to wait until the bear got hungry and coaxed it out with food, rather than try to flush her out from cramped quarters.

Two traps — 10 feet long, five feet tall and five feet wide — have been baited with honey, molasses, bacon, elk meat and fruit, he said. Seven foot snares had been placed by the brush.

Since the bear escaped Tuesday night, she mostly has been eating grass.

"People keep asking me if she has a name," Siddon said. "We've been calling her 'Trouble.'"

State police had hoped to locate the bear with an airplane equipped with Forward Looking Infrared, the same gear used by attack helicopters and tanks to spot the enemy in the Persian Gulf War. However, inclement weather Friday and Saturday had grounded the craft.

The closest handlers came to the bear was Wednesday after searchers in an aircraft spotted her in five-foot grass. Ground crews came within 100 feet but were unable to get a shot off, Siddon said.

Tuesday, the 290-pound female escaped by grabbing a sapling outside of its cage and hauling itself through a small hole in the chain-link fence about seven feet off the ground.

Wildlife Images, located about 10 miles north of town, treats injured and orphaned wildlife in an effort to return the animals back to the wild.

The three-year-old bear was captured in Montana after it became a problem foraging for food around people. Authorities brought it to the center last fall rather than kill it.
