

Men golfers set for regional

The Oregon men's golf team will have the services of All-American Jeff Lyons this week when it competes in the west regional in Provo, Utah, despite the fact that the senior suffered a mysterious illness Monday morning.

Oregon is one of 18 teams competing in the 54-hole tournament this week. The top nine teams and the top two individuals not on the qualifying teams will advance to the NCAA championships in June.

Lyons, who leads the team with a 73.71 stroke average, was admitted to Sacred Heart General Hospital early Monday morning with a mysterious stomach illness. Lyons skipped the team flight to Provo Monday afternoon but said Tuesday morning he was going to fly to Provo that afternoon.

"I'm going to play," Lyons said. "I feel a little weak, but I am sure I can play. I don't think this illness will affect me."

Lyons said he spent most of Monday in bed without food but felt fine after eating lunch Tuesday.

"(Monday) morning I really didn't think there was any way I would be playing in the tournament," Lyons said. "But things work out in mysterious ways, and I feel I'm ready."

The rest of the Ducks played a practice round at the par-72, 7,267-yard Riverside Country Club Tuesday afternoon, but Lyons was not sure how missing the practice round would affect his game.

"I have never played the course," Lyons said. "Missing the practice round might hurt, but it could help; I will be playing it blind."

Oregon finished in sixth place at the Pacific-10 Conference championships two weeks ago in Santa Barbara. Lyons and fellow senior Cam Martin paced the team at Pac-10s by finishing in 12th and 19th place, respectively.

Oregon was on a roll heading into the Pac-10 tournament when it won back-to-back team titles in the Western Intercollegiate and the U.S. Intercollegiate. Martin tied for individual medalist honors in each of those tournaments.

Oregon sophomore Ted Snavelly has also had a strong spring season, finishing in the top five at three tournaments, including fifth-place finishes at the Western Intercollegiate and U.S. Intercollegiate.

"My game is good right now," Snavelly said. "I feel comfortable in all aspects of my game, especially the mental side."

Rounding out the Ducks' roster for regionals are juniors Randy McCracken and Jeremy Forster. McCracken has played in all but one tournament for the Ducks this season and has a 76.7 stroke average. Forster, a junior college transfer from Port Angeles, Wash., has played in only three tournaments for Oregon but finished second in the team's qualifier for regionals.

Despite finishing sixth at Pac-10s, the Ducks say they have not lost the momentum they picked up with the consecutive victories in April.

"The momentum is still there," Snavelly said. "If we play well we go to nationals, so that is enough to get us fired up. I feel good because everyone is playing well. Randy and Jeremy are playing as well as they have all season."

Lyons echoed Snavelly's assertion that the team's depth is improving with each tournament.

"Everyone is playing well, especially Randy," Lyons said. "I think we are doing the best we have all year, so I am looking forward to it."

If the Ducks are to advance to their first NCAA championship since 1970, they will have to play well against a tough field. Nationally ranked Arizona State, Arizona, UNLV, UCLA and New Mexico will all be competing in Provo, and only the top nine teams will advance to nationals.

The tournament begins this morning and continues through Friday, and 18 holes are played each day.

Bulls get rest after series victory

CHICAGO (AP) — Trainer Chip Schaefer was the busiest member of the Chicago Bulls Tuesday following their sweep of the Cleveland Cavaliers, a series the Bulls paid for with injuries.

Horace Grant, John Paxson and other players with lesser injuries came in for treatment. Everyone else rested.

Michael Jordan didn't come in for treatment of his sprained wrist. It didn't seem to bother him Monday night when he hit a fadeaway 18-footer in the final second for a 103-101 victory.

"Michael is on medication," Schaefer said. "I don't expect him to come in. He needs a mental day off. He'll be a lot better by Sunday."

The Bulls expect to open the Eastern Conference finals Sunday in New York against the Knicks, assuming they get past the Charlotte Hornets.

Except for Grant, Schaefer expects the Bulls to be relatively healthy by Sunday.

"I'm more concerned about Horace," Schaefer said. "He could use a week to 10 days to recover."

Grant was limping Tuesday and wore a soft cast over his right ankle. He originally injured it in the opening game of the Cleveland series. But he came back in game two and scored 20 points, hitting all eight shots from the field and going four-for-four from the line in last Thursday night's 104-85 rout.

Grant apparently reinjured the ankle in the second period Monday night but kept playing and finished with 17 points and a team-high 10 rebounds.

Asked how he could play so well with the injury, Grant said, "Only God knows."

"Horace has the heart of a lion," Schaefer said. Paxson, who had knee surgery and eventually lost his point guard starting job to B.J. Armstrong, received treatment for his left knee.

Paxson was thankful for another sweep — and another week off — following the Bulls' 3-0 rout of Atlanta in the opening round.

"These two series have been great," Paxson said. "We're getting the rest we really need. It's like having a vacation between playoffs."

Paxson has done an excellent job in the playoffs coming off the bench for Armstrong — a reversal of their past roles. He expects a tougher series if the Bulls play the Knicks, who held a 3-1 edge over the Bulls in the regular season.

"It'll be more physical because the Knicks have a better defense," Paxson said. "The physical aspect will be totally different. It will be a sweat."

Coach Phil Jackson hopes his team's luck holds out.

"We weren't good tonight," Jackson said after Monday's game. "We were lucky we could hang around for three-and-a-half quarters so that we could play the way we like at the end of the game. And we're lucky Michael can do what he does."
