Men hope to stay close at Pac-10s

By Dave Charbonneau
Oregon Daily Emerald

As has been the case all season, Oregon head coach Bill Dellinger is keeping the expectations of his team low as it heads into today's Pacific-10 Conference Track and Field Championships in Berkeley, Calif.

And who could blame him. His team is full of young talent that has yet to compete at the Pac-10 level and has a top three qualifier in only two of the 20 events.

"We are looking forward to the Pac-10 meet, and not just to get it over with," Dellinger said. "We should be able to fight it out in the next echelon below UCLA and probably USC. UCLA is a very strong favorite to win."

The Bruins are indeed heavy favorites, with top five qualifiers in 16 of the 20 events. Dellinger is not setting his sights on the powerful UCLA team, and rightfully so. The Ducks' best hope is to finish at the top of the rest of the field.

The Ducks will need their veteran performers (Ronnie Harris, Grady O'Connor, Heath Howington, Derek Snelling and Jason Walton) to carry the load and hope a few younger guys come up big if they expect to compete for third place.

Sprints: USC and UCLA traditionally dominate the sprints, and this year is no exception. Combined, the two teams have three of the top four qualifiers in the 100, 200 and 400.

Although Oregon has three qualifiers in the 100, LaMont Woods seems to have the best chance of cracking the top three. Last weekend qualified for the event in 10.58, but will likely need a better time than that to have a chance at third place.

Ronnie Harris has been the talk of the Ducks' team this season, but his time of 46.84 in the 400 is still four-tenths of a second behind the top qualifier.

Middle distances: Oregon's Gordon Johnson has the third-best time in the 800 and is not far behind Washington's Mitch Leffler, who holds the second-fastest time. Arizona State's Jim McCreary is the heavy favorite in the event.

come of the meet.

The throws: The javelin should be one of Oregon's best events, with national leader Ashley Selman and teammate Tonia Roth expected to rack up some big points. The Ducks only have one entry in the shot and discus, but Julie Beck should be competitive in both events.

The jumps: Blair broke through the 20-foot barrier with a 20-4 long jump earlier this season, but she may have to jump 21 feet to win the Pac-10 title. Blair said she has recovered fully from her record-setting performance in the heptathlon last week. If her back holds out and she can compete at 100 percent, Oregon head coach Tom Heinonen could find himself soaked after being ceremoniously tossed into the steeplechase water pit as the winning Pac-10 coach.

In the 1,500, Oregon's Scott Nicholas could feed off his impressive performances over the past three weeks to crack the top three. Although he is still more than a second behind the third qualifier in the event, a personal record for Nicholas could have him in the running.

Distances: Washington's Greg Metcalf should easily win the steeplechase, with Arizona State's Erin Scroggins and Arizona's Martin Keino battling for second. Jason Humble is Oregon's only entry in the event.

Metcalf and teammate Neil Panchen are the top entries in the 5,000 and should finish 1-2, but the Ducks' Karl Keska is the fifth qualifier and has the potential to finish higher with a PR performance.

Hurdles: UCLA's Ross Flowers and Arizona's Leo Simmons should take the top two places in the 110-hurdles, but Oregon freshman Jamar Williams is right there in the hunt for third.

Grady O'Connor and Erik Ylitalo should earn points for Oregon in the 400 hurdles, but anything above a third-place finish for either is unlikely.

Throws: The Bruins should get big points in the throws, especially the shot put, where they have the top three qualifiers. Oregon's Heath Howington is the Ducks' lone entry in the shot and discus, but he is not likely to finish higher than fifth in either event.

Jumps: Snelling is one of the favorites in the pole vault and has the ability to win in such a volatile event.

Oregon freshman Ray Livingston is the only Oregon qualifier in the long jump and could finish in the top five with a solid performance. Devon Hosey has the third-best mark in the triple jump, and Oregon's Jason Walton could also make some noise in the high jump where he goes in with the fifth-best mark.

Relays: UCLA and USC should dominate the relays, with Arizona State giving them a run in the 4x100. Oregon's 4x400 team has the third-best time this season and has a shot at finishing second behind USC.
