mocratic, and he accused committee members of acting in a "vile and reprehensible manner."

"Few other people on campus have done more than Steve Masat to increase student empowerment," Moore said. "To blame the IFC's problems with the EMU on Steve is a cynical attempt to get him out of office."

Denying they were acting in an undemocratic manner, Mehretab, Lee and Carson started a heated shouting match with Moore.

Vice Chairwoman Lydia Lerma, who presided over the meeting after Masat left, warned the audience that she would clear the room if order was not restored.

"I don't want to see any behavior that is disrespectful to anyone," Lerma said.

Lerma voted to remove Masat from the IFC, saying she voted in favor of the motion in order to

Masat plans return to IFC

Although the Incidental Fee Committee removed him from office Friday, Steve Masat says he believes he still is a committee member.

"The committee's action is so blatantly illegal I don't consider it binding," Masat said.

Both the IFC and the Constitution Court read the ASUO Constitution incorrectly during the events that led to his dismissal, Masat said.

Masat also accused former ASUO president and present committee member Bobby Lee of distorting and manipulating the student government system to force him from office.

Masat said he believes the committee has the power, under a motion to reconsider its decision, to bring him back into office.

If the IFC does not vote to bring him back on the committee, Masat said he has a plan to return to the committee.

Masat said he was not yet ready to reveal the details of his plan.

"I have a plan, but that's all I care to say about it at this time," Masat said.

'The issue here is whether I'm being screwed. This is an utter joke and complete insanity.'

former IFC chairman

Before the committee could consider removing Masat, it had to change a rule that required six members be present to vote a member out of the IFC and a rule requiring five members vote for dismissal.

The committee changed the rule to require five members be present for a dismissal action and a two-thirds majority to vote a member out of office.

Moore accused the court of violating public meeting laws when it met to review O'Leary's injunction, but court members said they don't have to announce a public meeting when they meet to consider a member's injunction.

have the option of asking the committee to reconsider its action.

However, the ASUO Constitution does not give a branch of student government the power to bring back a member it has removed from office. The only way Masat could rejoin the IFC is if the Constitution Court rules the IFC's action was unconstitutional.

Chief Justice Paul Loving said the court does not believe the committee's decision violated the ASUO Constitution.

Masat had dodged expulsion from the committee Thursday when O'Leary issued an injunction forbidding the IFC from suspending two internal rules that would have allowed them to consider removing Masat from office.

In the injunction, O'Leary quoted a new amendment to the ASUO Constitution, approved in the April general election, that requires the court to review any branch of student government's proposed rule changes before they go into effect.

The court met before the IFC meeting Friday and decided the committee's proposed rule changes were legal.

a simple, straightforward program to solve the problem. With an on-line computer the entire campus would be hooked up to the same system and there would be no disputing the requirements called up on a screen.

But Gayle Freeman of the registrar's office said that would strain the system and create more confusion because students don't read the instructions while using automated systems.

In the past, the registrar has experienced automation failure because students get impatient and just start pushing buttons, she said.
