Women's golf team heads for Georgia

By Steve Mims
Oregon Daily Emerald

The Oregon women's golf team begins play in its first NCAA championship ever this morning at the University of Georgia Golf Course in Athens.

The Ducks qualified for the national tournament two weeks ago when they finished ninth at the west regional in Tucson, Ariz. The top 10 of 18 teams at the regional tournament qualified for the NCAA championships, and they will join seven teams from the East in Athens this week.

The Ducks will send a young squad that features three sophomores, one junior and one senior to the national championships. Senior Shannon Maier, who leads the squad with a 77.8 stroke average, and junior Cappy Mack led the Ducks at the regional meet with three-round totals of 221 to tie for 29th place.

Leigh Casey leads Oregon's sophomores and is second on the team with a 78 average for the year. Casey has struggled in the postseason but leads the team with four top-10 finishes, including a second-place finish at the Bruin Classic in the fall.

Women's golf first became an intercollegiate sport at Oregon in 1977, but it was cut in 1981 as part of a budget decision. The sport returned six years later under the control of men's golf coach Scott Krieger.

Renee Baumgartner joined the program to work with Krieger in 1987 before taking over the head coaching responsibilities in 1989.

The Ducks' golf program began to reach a competitive level in the Pac-10 in 1991 when it finished tied for fourth at the conference tournament. Oregon finished fifth at the Pac-10 championships in 1992 before equaling its best finish ever at the tournament last month when it once again finished tied for fourth place.

The Ducks have never competed in the NCAA championships as a team, and current Oregon assistant coach Leigh Hornung competed in the tournament as an individual last year and tied for 82nd place with a 320.

The Ducks will host the NCAA championships for the first time next spring when the tournament is at the Oregon Golf Club in Portland.

This year's national championships begin this morning and continue through Saturday. Eighteen holes will be played each day.
