

Blair, Selman to go after titles at NCAAs

The Oregon women's track and field team will begin the first day of the NCAA championships today with Kelly Blair going after the heptathlon title in New Orleans, La.

Blair, who has already set the Pacific-10 Conference record and two school records this season in the heptathlon, is one of the favorites.

Ashley Selman is the other Oregon woman who is expected to finish near the top in her event, as she will go after her second NCAA championship in the javelin. Selman won the event in 1990 while competing for USC. This season, she has the second-longest throw in the nation.

The Ducks also hope to get points from Camara Jones in the 400. Last season, Jones finished fifth in the event at the NCAAs and only two of her competitors are back for the NCAAs this season.

Jones will also run a leg in the 4x100-meter relay with LaReina Woods, Lisa Bedwell and Jamila Godfrey.

In the distance races, Nicole Woodward and Erika Klein will be looked upon to carry the weight.

Woodward will make her third straight trip to the NCAAs to compete in the 3,000-meter event. Klein will be making her first appearance at the meet in the 1,500.

Julie Beck will give the Ducks a competitor in both the discus and the shot put.

The men failed to earn a single invitation to the NCAAs for the first time since 1953. Heath Howington (discus), Derek Snelling (pole vault) and Scott Nicholas (1,500) all had provisional marks in their events but didn't quite make the cut.

The meet starts today with four events in the heptathlon, and preliminaries races in other events. Most of the finals will be run Friday and Saturday. The meet concludes Saturday.

Duck women golfers end year at NCAAs

The Oregon women's golf team struggled during its first NCAA championship appearance ever, finishing last out of 17 teams Saturday in Athens, Ga.

The Ducks opened the four-day tournament with consecutive 322 team totals during the first two rounds, followed by a 317 Friday and a 332 in the final round.

Sophomore Karly Mills shot Oregon's best two individual rounds during the tournament and led the Ducks with a 315 total. Mills shot a three-over-par 76 during the second round before finishing the tournament with a 75.

Junior Cappy Mack was the only other Duck who broke 80 in two rounds, as she shot 77 in the opening round and 79 in the final round. Mack finished the tournament at 327, third on the team behind Mills and Leigh Casey, who finished at 325. Sophomore Shannon Hare had a four-round total of 333, followed by senior Shannon Maier at 334.

Mack was named to the True Temper All-American College Scholar Golf Team and Smith-Corona All-Scholar Team Tuesday, one of only five players in the nation named on both teams. Mack, who had a 79.1 stroke average this season, has a 3.96 GPA.

The good news for the Ducks is that four of the five players who competed in nationals will return next
