

Fifth year seniors ...

Taking their Time

□ Attending a fifth year of college can cost thousands in tuition and lost salaries

When Ben Fisk went to pick up his tassel, his friends Guner Warren and Hiroshi Hishida only went along for the ride. While all three of these students entered college at the same time. They will not be graduating together. Guner Warren and Hiroshi Hishida will be returning for their fifth years of college next fall. Ben Fisk will be looking for a job.

"I am totally glad to be getting on with my life, these losers could have graduated in four," Fisk said, smiling at his friends.

Hishida and Warren are part of a large group of students who are choosing not to, or are unable to, graduate four years after entering the University.

"I'll be out of here soon enough," said Warren, a Biochemistry major.

"I am only going to be a fifth year senior because I went to Waseda," said Hishida, a Finance major. The Waseda program is a year-long foreign exchange to the Japanese university of that name.
