Stars don't disappoint at Pre

Mozambique's Marie Mutola, a student at Lane Community College, missed a world record by two seconds in the 1,000 at the Prefontaine Classic.

Anyone who still believes world-class track meets happen exclusively on European soil didn't see the Prefontaine Classic at Hayward Field Saturday night.

Many of the 8,099 spectators had come to see Sergei Bubka, the world record-holder in the pole vault, compete for the first time in Eugene. Bubka won the event by clearing 19-2, and then he sent a stir through the crowd by asking officials to raise the bar to 20-1 3/4, a would-be world record.

On his third attempt, Bubka got his torso over the standard, but his forearm grazed the bar on his descent.

"I feel very bad. I was very close, and I feel I could have done better," Bubka said. "The last attempt was very close, and I'm upset about it. It just wasn't a good takeoff, but there's nothing I can do about it now."

Two of the distance races, the steeplechase and the 5,000 meters, produced the fastest times in the world this season.

Former Arizona runner Marc Davis waited until the final stretch to pass former NCAA champion Mark Croghan to record a 8:20.14 win in the steeple, and Todd Williams, the 10th-place finisher in last year's Olympic meet, ran by himself the last 3,000
