EMU Board approves Taco Bell for Fishbowl

□ Self-service yogurt and espresso bar on tap for revamped food service

The EMU Food Service is well on its way to include Taco Bell tacos on the fall term menu.

But at least one EMU Board member said that idea leaves a bad taste in his mouth.

The project, which has already been funded by the Incidental Fee Committee and approved nine to one by the EMU Board, would replace part of the EMU Fishbowl with a Taco Bell stand, a self-service yogurt stand and a gourmet espresso bar. The Taco Bell stand and espresso bar would be accessible from both inside and outside the Fishbowl.

EMU Director Charles "Dusty" Miller said he expects the project to be finished by start of classes in the fall.

EMU Board Chairwoman Jenny Beaumont was unavailable for comment.

The board voted on the proposal May 22, the new board's first meeting. Board member Stephen Conser said there was concern that the Taco Bell banner might detract from the Fishbowl.

"Someone said it might put a high school sort of attractiveness to it," he said.

Miller said management had no intention detracting from the fishbowl or food court by the operation.

He said students like buying food from a name brand vendor. An agreement with Taco Bell was sought, he said, because Mexican food fared well on a food service survey filled out by student, faculty and staff who use the food service.

That brings out another point of contention with Conser, who said there was no mention of Taco Bell on the survey when Mexican food was suggested.

The agreement sought with Taco Bell would be a licensing agreement, not a franchise, Miller said. Under the agreement, University employees would work the stand and sell products supplied by the Taco Bell. Some sort of uniform will probably be used, he said.

All management decisions would be kept under University control, Miller said.

Funding for the project comes mostly from the IFC, which approved $50,000 for construction. Other money will come from EMU building and equipment funds, which the state requires student unions to budget.

Miller said he hopes the project will be finished before classes so there will be time for training and preparation.

"It's to our advantage to open up on the first day with whatever we have," he said. "We want to say, 'Yes, we're here and we can do what we said we could do.'"

The project is currently working under tentative approval from the University Planning Committee, which must approve all construction at the University.

Final approval will be given after the project's architect can demonstrate to the University Planning Office that there is access for the handicapped and how the architect will design the exact the location of the site. The exact building site has yet to be determined, though Miller said it will be on the west side of the Fishbowl.

This project represents the first part of a planned EMU-wide renovation covering an upgrade of the food services and original EMU building, of the day care centers and of the new section of the building. Miller said much of the food service equipment is dated back to the 1950s.

He is hopeful these changes can be accomplished, but funding is in question.

The director is currently eyeing the State System of Higher Education Student Building Fund. Students statewide pay into the fund between $18.50 and $27.50 a term, depending on their status, generating about $3.4 million a year, he

Summer law school course to examine civil rights

□ Class is being offered to non-law students and the public

Civil Rights and Civil Wrongs is the title of a summer law school course open to non-law students and the public.

Law school professors Dave Schuman and Jane Gordon organized the class "to look at rights from a number of perspectives," Schuman said.

The class will tackle issues such as "what is a right," and "of what value are rights," Schuman said.

This is the second year a class like this has been offered.

Last summer, the law school offered a class dealing with justice and racial issues.

"It grew out of the concern last year with the Rodney King (verdict and ensuing riots) and a widespread concern about the legal system and the role of the legal system," Schuman said.

The class will meet Monday and Wednesday nights from 4:30 to 6:15 p.m., today through July 21, and is open to law student for two credits and non-law students for three credits and is graded Pass/No Pass.

Tonight's class will begin with an overview of rights — natural, human, constitutional and civil, and will be taught by Schuman.

Subsequent courses will discuss "Rights on the Street and in the Workplace: The LAPD and other Hostile Environments," "Your Right to Hate Speech vs. My Right to Equality: Hate Speech & Hate Crimes," "Unwanted Sexual Attention: When Unpleasant Becomes Illegal," "Affirmative Action: Justice Delayed or Reverse Discrimination," "Popular Democracy & Unpopular People: Ballot Initiatives and the Rights of Minorities," "The Rights of Russians after the U.S.S.R.," "Apartheid and After: Rights in Africa" and "Civil, Constitutional & Human Rights in the Interamerican System."

Courses will be taught by various law school and outside instructors, including law school Dean Dave Frohn-mayer, who will teach the hate speech class, and Dr. Michael Goldstein of the Harvard University Russian

GRAD DIES IN STOLEN CAR

(AP) - A Eugene teenager died in the crash of a stolen sports car just eight days after his high school graduation, state police say.

Jarrod Grant, 18, graduated June 12 from South Eugene High School, where he was a varsity football player and drummer in the school band. He died at the scene of the crash at 1 a.m. Sunday, state police Sgt. Rusty Wolfe said.

Daniel Cassell, 17, a former classmate, was driving the car, a 1993 Nissan ZX sports car, which was reported stolen from an automobile show lot Sunday morning. It remains unclear who stole the car.

Police said Cassell was driving at a "high rate of speed" when he apparently veered into oncoming traffic. When he swerved to avoid traffic the passenger side of the car slammed into a fir tree alongside the road.

SPORTS

NEW YORK (AP) - Friday's fifth game of the NBA playoffs received a 19.0 rating on NBC, the fifth-highest rating ever for an NBA telecast.

The game got a 36 percent share, up 37 percent over the 13.9 rating for last year's Game 5, according to figures released Monday by A.C. Neelson Co. The rating is the percentage of television households in the nation, with each point representing 931,000 homes. The share is the percentage of televisions on at the time.

Game 6 on Sunday night got a 21.8 overnight rating and 40 percent share from the top-29 markets, up from a 17.6 rating in 1992.
