Zero has many connotations — the most obvious being the absence of value — but Zero also means great music as Eugene will find out when Zero, the band, play the WOW Hall Saturday at 9 p.m.

Unlike many bands, who find solace in playing with the same members and trying to imitate the same musical style that allowed them to sell the most records, "Zero believes in taking chances to the point of recklessness," said a San Francisco Chronicle article. The band experiments with elements of jazz, contemporary rock and rhythm and blues.

When the band takes the stage Saturday, the lineup will feature Steve Kimock (Kingfish and Goodman Brothers Band) on lead guitar, Pete Sears (Rod Stewart and Jefferson Starship) on keyboards, Martin Fierro (Jerry Garcia Band and Mother Earth) on saxophone, Greg Anton (Keith and Donna Band and Heart of Gold Band) on drums and percussion, Judge Murphy (Judge Mackerel Blues Band) on vocals, and Bobby Vega (Sly and the Family Stone and Paul Butterfield Blues Band) on bass.

This performance will feature new and recent songs written expressly for the band by Grateful Dead lyricist Robert Hunter, and new instrumental selections from Zero's albums, Here Goes Nothin' Nothin' Goes Here and Go Hear Nothin'.

During its seven years together, the band has developed a singular sound, fusing inventive melodic solos with brilliant ensemble playing.

Zero is made up of a number of renowned soloists, which allows the band to draw from the ranks of its band members in other bands to expand its sound. They have been joined in the studio and on stage by such legendary Bay Area performers as Jerry Garcia and Grace Slick.

Tickets for the WOW Hall performance are on sale at Baladeer Music, CD World, the EMU Main Desk, Happy Trails, House of Records, Record Garden, and the WOW Hall. The price of this evening of "Zero Consciousness" is $8 in advance and $10 at the door.

Oregon Trail play takes to stage

The Oregon Theatre Project, a new Eugene theater company, will present its first production tonight in Coburg.

An Oregon Idyl — written by Oregon playwright Joaquin Miller — will be at 8 p.m. at the Coburg Econolodge/Dutch Oven, located off of Interstate 5 at Exit 199.

As part of the Oregon Trail Sesquicentennial celebration, the play goes back to the 1870s with old-time music, clog dancing and a melodrama about settling the state.

Miller arrived in Coburg from the Oregon Trail in 1852 and celebrated his love for the Northwest in his stories, poetry and plays. His plays were successful from San Francisco to Broadway to London.

An Oregon Idyl is a 19th century melodrama, as it casts a man of mixed race as the hero and deals with the politics and prejudices of the time.

Set in the vast, forested wilderness along the Molalla River in the Cascades, the story revolves around a controversy where a land owner, after missing for 20 years, returns to sell the property that has been settled by pioneers. Fearing the loss of their homes, the settlers take matters into their

The play runs Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights at the Dutch Oven through Aug. 7. For more information, call 345-4264.
