Student leaders get USSA seats

By S.A. Clemens
Oregon Daily Emerald

Student leaders accomplished more than they thought they would at the United States Students Association Congress in Los Angeles, where the University made a big showing this year, said those who went.

The University had a powerful presence at the conference and was able to gain five seats on the board of directors, making it one of the best represented in the lobbying organization.

"U of O was the strongest block of students," said ASUO President Eric Bowen. "Because of our involvement, we left a name for ourselves."

The congress, a convention-style meeting, is used to help define the platform for the group as well as elect officers for various student caucuses. A consensus is formed at this meeting of what ideas and issues USSA should deal with for the next year. It will be up to the board of directors to refine the general ideas into a working agenda during the year.

ASUO Vice President Diana Collins Puente was elected as a co-chairperson of the La Coalicion caucus, formerly known as the Latino caucus, and hopes that her new influence will help the standing of the University and help Latino students in the university system.

The four other students winning positions on the board were Michelle Parks, People of African Descent caucus co-chairperson; Troy Shields, National Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Student Coalition co-chairperson; Erika Armsbury, Northwest Pacific Regional co-chairperson; and Eden Ajrian-Omari, National Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual People of Color caucus.

The representatives also spent time in workshops dealing with topics from the North American Free Trade Agreement to campus safety.

Both Bowen and Collins Puente say they have tried to bring back ideas that they can use at the University. They also hope to increase the school's standing in the USSA.

"There is no other organization (lobbying nationally for students) that is as respected in Washington, D.C.," Collins Puente said.

For that reason, she believes the University should continue to support and try to influence the lobbying group.

Collins Puente said the next step is to bring in younger people to the USSA from the University in order to continue the work of garnering influence in the capital for students.

still on the comptroller's list of people with access to the newspaper's funds, according to the report.

The report goes on to state that the suspect was able to fill out a purchase order for the money and have a check made out to his organization before the Insurgent staff had his financial authorization revoked.

"(The comptroller's office) did not know that the suspect was no longer a member of the Insurgent when the check was issued," said Tin Huu Bui, the current head comptroller for the ASUO.

Although the current administration had nothing to do with the mix-up, Bui said he was the one who approved the check when he worked for the office last year and that there was nothing out of the ordinary about the payment as far as the office knew at the time.

Police are still investigating, and, until the final report is forwarded to the district attorney's office and a decision is made as to whether charges should be filed, much of the information regarding the case cannot be released.
