alistic thinking we can solve all the world's problems, or we have our own selfish motives for doing something.

We never learn, it seems.
ODE: Is it your interest in these kinds of issues that led you to write for the Insurgent?

Andy: I like writing about international-type topics, and that was the best vehicle to do it.

ODE: Are you going to write more this year than what you've already done for the first issue?

Andy: I'm really holding off on making a commitment, but there's things that I've got on my mind.

ODE: Is it going along better down at the Insurgent now that they have some different people?

Andy: I'm pretty confident in Cinde Rosenbalm and Michelle Parks; I know them well. I wouldn't expect much bullshit this year — they want to do it for the right reasons.

ODE: What other groups have you been involved with here and at Lane?

Andy: I first started getting involved as a senator in student government at Lane, and then I was student body president the next year. Then I came over here, and during that year I was in the Gulf War.

And then when I came back, I pretty much stayed out of everything. (Former ASUO President) Jen Bills asked me to apply to the IFC, and I got sucked into that.

Last year I worked for the ASUO as assistant state affairs coordinator, but it was a bunch of shit — it was a waste of time.

ODE: When you were president at Lane, what kind of money were you making?

Andy: Almost $600 a month, plus tuition.

ODE: I think that's more than (ASUO President) Eric Bowen makes.

Andy: Oh, yeah, it's a lot more.

ODE: Why?

Andy: I don't know — he should make more. Not that they really do a lot, but if they're going to spend that much time, they should at least be able to make enough to live on.

ODE: Me and Ed Carson almost mockingly ran for the ASUO Executive last year, but we kind of bogged out on it at the end. We kind of ran out of gas.

Andy: That would've been great. That would've been a good year.

I don't think many people got into it too much last year. It wasn't like the year before. I probably wouldn't have even voted last year, except I didn't really care for that Mark Johnson guy too much.

I thought he thought he knew a little too much. His comments during an ASUO debate about Larry Campbell being tired of political science majors hassling him — that bothered me a little bit.

ODE: Did you read about that in the Emerald ... or, better yet, do you read the Emerald?

Andy: Every day ... I pick it up. I think most students pick it up and leaf through it.

But I think that most people who know about it look forward to the Commentator coming out. I know I do.

They're going to slam people more so than the Insurgent. I think people look at the front page of the Insurgent ... they look at the most prominent story, and it's boring as hell. But I don't think we have to worry about that this year.

One criticism that I have of the Emerald is that it is ... too mainstream; it presents the news, but not a whole lot of analysis, not a lot in-depth — a "Why is this happening?"

ODE: Are you one of those people that gets pissed off when we leave the crossword out?

Andy: I don't look at the back — except for the "Far Side" or "Calvin and Hobbes." I don't read the classifieds. I don't give a shit and I don't think most people care — that's my opinion.

ODE: If you don't like the crossword, then what kind of hobbies do you have?

Andy: I like to travel, I like to read ... I like guns a lot. I've got five hand guns, a couple of assault rifles, a couple of shotguns, a couple of hunting rifles.

ODE: Want to take me out shooting some time?

Andy: Sure, any time. As long as you don't mind chipping in for the ammo.

"Drinks with ..." is a regular feature in the Emerald this year. Emerald Editor Jake Berg will conduct the question-and-answer session with each "Drinks with ..." topic.
