SPRINGFIELD — The third annual Children and Youth Fair celebrated Children's Week Saturday at Gateway Mall.

The fair included a variety of interactive activities for children and youths. Hands-on activities ranged from creating home made cards to learning how to use a sextant, a navigational instrument used at sea. About 20 social service agencies offered information on the various resources available to children.

Judith Rob-McCord, organizer of the event for the past three years, said she wants to achieve her goal of improving "the quality of life of children through action in the community."

As an active member of Youth Development Commission, Rob-McCord works to contract money for children's services and community planning.

TCI Cablevision shared in the day's entertainment by giving information on family programming to raise money for the recently funded Lane Child Advocacy Center. The center will be under the direction of the Lane County district attorney's office. It's mission is to "provide a safe atmosphere for children and youth to testify and to coordinate
