KIDNAPPING

She was wrapped in the blanket taken from her home and a black jacket that Hare was spotted wearing earlier.

"Without the canines, this girl wouldn't have been found until daylight," Birr said.

Birr said the girl was taken to Sacred Heart General Hospital and released to her family. Hare was arraigned Monday afternoon on charges of first-degree burglary and first-degree kidnapping.

Birr said an investigation is pending and additional charges may be brought against Hare.

University public safety officials are using the incident to educate students on how to keep criminals away from campus.

"The student body needs to be aware of stories like this," Drayton said. "We estimate that a lot of people who want to commit a crime are looking to do so on campus."

Drayton said the University was able to avoid any problems from Hare because public safety officials were notified before he could commit a crime.

"I just want to use this as an example of what turned out right," he said.

However, he said, the University attracts a lot of potential criminals, and students need to call public safety whenever they see someone suspicious on campus. Students, faculty and staff should be extra cautious with asking to get into locked buildings or residence halls, he said.
