the University.

Although Spradling said administrators can't really foresee what benefits the University could expect, the sales tax would "have a stabilizing factor" on the budget, he said.

"We don't have a prediction, but we would not see the cuts that we anticipate if Measure 1 fails" and Ballot Measure 5 takes full effect, he said.

If replacement revenue is not found and Measure 5 continues, state funding for higher education for 1995-97 would be an estimated $100-$120 million less than it is now, and an estimated $450-$500 million less than higher education was allotted in 1990-91, according to a report by the University Office of Communications and Marketing.

As to the estimated general fund money that would go to higher education if the sales tax is enacted, "Nobody knows the answer," said Jim Scherzinger, director of the Legislative Revenue Office.

Since the sales tax proposal excludes higher education,

Survey shows misconceptions

The position people take for or against Ballot Measure 1 is most often a result of misconceptions of waste in state government, a state-wide survey has shown.

While 38 percent of those surveyed strongly opposed Measure 1, most of those people reached their conclusion because they misunderstood the levels of government waste and spending, the survey said. The largest majority of those opposed to the measure - 55.6 percent - were those with the least amount of correct information, answering only one, or zero, answers correctly out of 10 responses. No question was answered correctly by more than half of those responding, according to the survey.

More than 54 percent believed state legislators are paid at least $3,000 per month. Actually, legislators are paid about $1,000 per month, which only 16.8 percent of those surveyed got correct. In addition, 50.3 percent of those surveyed believed Oregon taxes were much higher than average. Actually, they are about four percent below the national average in dollars and about four percent above the national average as percent of income, according to the survey.

The largest majority in the survey, 60.8 percent, believed that state and local taxes in Oregon, as percent of income, were much higher in 1990 than in 1980. However, the taxation level has stayed almost exactly the same during that time, according to the survey.

However, misconceptions also may help pass the measure. Almost 43 percent of the respondents felt that state spending for K-12 education actually fell between the last two budget periods. Actually, state support for K-12 funding has increased since the previous budget period. It is higher education spending that has fallen, according to the survey.

College graduates were more than three times as likely to favor the measure as those without a high school diploma.

whether colleges and universities would get more money from the state general fund depends on what the Legislature does, he said.

"The sales tax doesn't even cover the total replacement of Measure 5. It only restores about 75 percent," he said.

That's because Oregonians are taxed an average of 12.5 percent of their income. If the Measure 5 property tax limitations continue, that tax burden would be lowered to 10.5 percent. Measure 1 would restore the taxation level to 12 percent, or 75 percent of current levels, Scherzinger said.

Although the measure wouldn't completely replace all of the Measure 5 loss of revenue, "it would go a long way toward it," Brand said.
