Oregon running back Sean Burwell and his backfield mates are finally healthy, but they will need an outstanding performance Saturday to move the ball against Washington State's tough run defense.

Ducks begin race for postseason play at home against WSU

By Steve Mims
 Oregon Daily Emerald

The Oregon football season began with high hopes and Rose Bowl talk, but injuries, comebacks and untimely poor performances have left the Ducks in critical condition.

The Ducks' situation is now simple; they must win all four remaining games to guarantee a bowl berth, or win three of four to be in position for postseason play. Oregon's final run begins Saturday when it faces Washington State at 1 p.m. at Autzen Stadium.

The Cougars are coming off a crushing 9-6 loss at Arizona when kicker Aaron Price's 49-yard field goal went wide left on the last play of the game. A win would have put Washington State in a tie for first place in the Pacific-10 Conference, and a tie would have kept them in the Rose Bowl hunt.

"We are trying to put the game behind us," Washington State All-American linebacker Anthony McClanahan said. "But it's hard. We should have won the game; our defense out played theirs."

The Cougars dropped to fifth place in the conference with the loss, but they still have a lot to play for. The Rose Bowl is nearly impossible now, but WSU still has a shot at playing in a bowl game for the second consecutive year.

The Cougars have a different look this year behind a defense that is ranked sixth in the country in total defense and second nationally in rushing defense. Washington State's defense, spearheaded by McClanahan, is giving up only 58 yards rushing per game.

Oregon's rushing game should face its stiffest test of the year against the Cougars. Oregon running backs Sean Burwell and Ricky Whittle have been hobbled by injuries throughout the year, but both appear to be healthy for the first time this year.

The improved defense means that the Cougars no longer need to rely on their high-powered offense to win games. Fans should not be surprised if the game is low scoring this year, as opposed to the past five Oregon-Washington State matchups, when at least one of the teams scored in excess of 30 points.

Washington State has experimented recently with a two-quarterback offense featuring sophomore Shawn Deeds and junior Chad DeGrenier. Cougar head coach Mike Price said he plans to continue rotating quarterbacks during the game.

"During and after the game I wasn't sure how effective it was," Price said. "But after looking at the videos I think it was extremely effective. Chad DeGrenier made the third down plays four of the five times he went into the game."

Oregon's offense will be looking to find the explosiveness it showed most of the year before last week's breakdown at Washington. Oregon quarterback

Danny O'Neil ranks ninth nationally in total offense, but his passing efficiency took a severe blow when he tossed six interceptions against the Huskies.

"Danny had a bad day at the office, so to speak," Brooks said. "But he had a tough second half against USC and he bounced back against Arizona State. He is a confident quarterback and a tough player. I think he'll do just fine this week."

O'Neil may need to have a spectacular game if Oregon's defense doesn't get healthy soon. Defensive linemen Silila Malepeai and Mark Slymen are out, and fellow linemen Gary Williams and Troy Bailey are questionable. In addition, defensive back Alex Molden and linebacker Jeremy Asher are doubtful.

With three of its final four games at home, Oregon is in a situation where it can possibly qualify for a bowl game without winning on the road. However, a loss at home forces the Ducks to win next week at sixth-ranked Arizona to keep its bowl hopes alive.
