Oregon stuff

FROM THE PAST: During the mid-1950s, the Erb Memorial Union gave away Oregon souvenirs, including an extra long book of matches (with 200 matches) and a disposable ash tray. Inside the book of matches was a campus map.

minor issues the administration would be willing to discuss instead.

IFC Chairman Jian Liu and ASUO President Eric Bowen both said that because the document was late, the groups would accept no decision that would change the Clark Document for the current funding period. Any accepted changes would be considered only for next year.

And unless an agreement comes soon, any debate would be useless, Liu said, because Monday represented the start of the budget season. Discussing later changes now would only create more problems as officials begin developing budgets for the next fiscal period, which starts July 1.

The time to talk was 10 days before the deadline, as prescribed by state rules, the official said.

"You can't continue discussion when there is nothing on the table," said Liu, referring to the lack of a finished amendment. He said without the actual document, there is nothing to base further debate on.

Bowen agreed with Liu, adding that he had been waiting for the proposed amendment but never received anything in writing. University President Myles Brand wrote in a memo dated May 18, 1993, that the administration would begin the process of writing an amendment to the Clark Document.

The ASUO president wrote Moseley in a memo Friday saying that because he hasn't received the amendments, he would "direct the ASUO Executive, Incidental Fee Committee and the EMU board to proceed under the current version of the Clark Document." Bowen received the document Monday.

"We're not doing it the old way," Moseley said in response to Bowen's memo.

Moseley said Brand's May 18 memo gave notice. He said the memo also marked the end of any discussion and ended any responsibility by the administration to circulate the amendment in its written form.

The University pushed for a revised Clark Document, Moseley said, in the 1991-92 school year when IFC members increasingly demanded line-item veto power over the EMU board budget.

The administration granted an extension in 1992, so then-ASUO President Bobby Lee could set up a series of public meetings to allow more debate. Low attendance, especially by IFC members, and continual concerns over the IFC sparked the May 18 memo, he said.

Last year's IFC, headed by Steve Masat, deeply concerned the administration, Moseley said, because of mismanagement and the former chairman's intent on line-item control.

Liu acknowledged that Masat was a problem, but that the IFC should be allowed to take care of internal problems itself. Liu said he has introduced a measure to keep the IFC from gaining line-item control. The amendment is currently in front of the ASUO Constitution Court.
