Volleyball travels to Washington

By Scott Simonson
Oregon Daily Emerald

The Oregon volleyball team has won one match during the last eight weeks. Now, its goal is three wins in its final five matches.

It wouldn't be impossible. It wouldn't redeem a 4-17 season, either. But it's better than the alternative, which is extending a seven-match losing streak.

"I haven't sensed any quit in this team all year," head coach Gerry Gregory said. "We've set a goal for the next five matches. We're heavy underdogs in two of them, but we want to try and win three."

Oregon makes its final road trip of the season when it travels to Washington and Washington State this weekend. The Ducks are in last place in the Pacific-10 Conference with a 1-12 record.

Considering Oregon's season so far, three wins in three weeks seems far-fetched. However, its remaining schedule includes matches against the conference's seventh, eighth, and ninth-place teams. Washington, 2-10 in the Pac-10, is the ninth-place team. Oregon beat the Huskies in three games in their first meeting. The Ducks play at Washington on Saturday night.

"I think we've probably been eyeing each other in an interesting way this year," Gregory said. "We're saying, 'Hey, we can beat this team,' and they've probably been saying the same thing about us."

The Ducks open the road trip at Washington State on Friday night. Pullman prides itself on earning a home court advantage by drawing big crowds.

"I wouldn't say it's an intimidating place to play," Gregory said. "They're an obnoxious crowd, and it's probably as rude of a crowd as we face at any time during the season. It can be distracting, but hopefully we have the maturity to overcome that. They won't win any popularity contests with the coaches."

Quick hitter Karissa Meith, whose 3.66 kills per game average leads Oregon, is still recovering from an ankle injury. She is expected to be a starter this weekend.
