Floater gave John Henry's crowd something to shout about last week. They will bring their rhythm based rock bat to John Henry's on Nov. 26.

FLOATING OUT OF NOWHERE

Floater was only a few songs into their set last week at John Henry's when Rob Wynia's bass lost a string.

Snap. Twang. Something like that. Before the crowd knew it, the string was wildly flailing from Wynia's bass.

Bass strings rarely — if ever — break, but it's a wonder that with the way Wynia was hitting his ax during the first few songs that it didn't come apart sooner.

"Anyone have an extra bass?" Wynia jokingly asked the receptive midnight crowd.

No offers, but the show went on ... and it went on well enough for drummer Pete Cornett to call it the band's best show yet.

Not that Floater has even played that many shows yet. Although this was the group's third time at John Henry's, the KWVA-sponsored Screw outdoor show is the only other public appearance to its name.

For the Oregon Daily Emerald

After watching Judgment Night, I have come to hope that there is a Hell and that the damned will be punished according to their crimes.

This is because only Hell could be a fit punishment for the makers of Judgment Night. My hope is that when Judgment Day comes, everyone involved in the making of the movie will be forced to watch their cinematic masterpiece for eternity.

(As a sidenote, I believe a similar punishment should be extended to everyone who owns or is
