Ducks and Beavers fired up for another Civil War

By Steve Mims
Oregon Daily Emerald

To most of the college football world, Saturday's Civil War game between Oregon and Oregon State doesn't mean a lot. However, to the two in-state rivals it means everything.

Oregon and Oregon State took different directions in 1993, with the Beavers ending the season more satisfied, though they have won fewer games than the Ducks. Saturday's game is a chance to put the perfect ending on Oregon State's most successful season under third-year head coach Jerry Pettibone.

"A win Saturday would put the icing on the cake," Pettibone said. "It is obvious what a great rivalry this is. It is the most intense one I've ever been a part of. So many graduates of the schools remain in this state and look forward to this game."

Oregon head coach Rich Brooks is a veteran of the Civil War matchups, having played and coached at Oregon State before taking the head coaching job at Oregon in 1977. He said the rivalry is getting better as the teams get stronger.

"The direction of the series has become more competitive the last three years," Brooks said. "Oregon State has closed the gap - not only on us - but on the rest of the Pacific-10 Conference as well."

The Ducks dominated the series from 1975-87, winning 12 of the 13 games and tying the other. Oregon State has since won two of five games, including a 14-3 win over the Ducks in 1991. Following the win, Oregon State carried its seniors off of the Autzen Stadium turf and released a video of the game entitled, We Own The State.

"They beat us two years ago," Oregon running back Ricky Whittle said. "And you hear about it all the time. It seems like they forgot that we won last year."

Whittle said that though the Ducks are disappointed with last weekend's 38-34 loss to Stanford, they shouldn't have a problem getting up for Saturday's game.

"You can always get up for the Oregon State game," Whittle said. "Especially after they gave Washington a good game. We've only scored one touchdown in our last three games against Oregon State."

Oregon linebacker Ernest Jones, who will have his hands full trying to contain Oregon State's wishbone offense, backed up what Whittle said.

"The Civil War is not hard to get up for," Jones said. "They're a better team than we've faced in recent years. We can't just expect to show up and stop the run."

Although many players on both teams are not from Oregon, it has not taken them long to realize how much the Civil War means within the state. Take wide receiver Derrick Deadwiler, a native of San Diego, Calif., for example.

"They are going to come in with the attitude that it's no holds barred," Deadwiler said. "Oregon versus Oregon State is a sort of state Super Bowl. It's all about the state bragging rights and whose going to get it. They are going to come in with a very confident attitude, and we are going to have to prove once again that they can't hang with us."

Two factors that could play big roles in Saturday's game are the weather and bye weeks. Oregon State had a bye week last week, giving them two weeks to prepare for Oregon's offense, and Brooks admits that may work to its advantage.

"[The bye week] gives them an advantage simply from a freshness standpoint," Brooks said. "Having a week off helps them; it gives them double the time we've had in practice."

As for the weather, Brooks said his team doesn't mind the rain, but if the winds pick up like they did in Corvallis last year, that's a different story.

"Bad weather doesn't help either team," Brooks said. "Wind wouldn't hurt Oregon State's running game, but it would hurt us. I think our team can throw in the rain, but the wind would hurt."
