BOARD

standards," said Janice Wilson, chair of the Board, at the meeting at Oregon Health Sciences University.

Higher education officials will begin pilot testing of admission assessments this summer in selected Oregon high schools.

The new standards are a better way to judge the aptitude of a college applicant, instead of relying only on grade point averages and Scholastic Aptitude Test Scores which may not truly reflect the applicant's merit, said Bobby Lee, former ASUO president and member of the Board.

Instead of just submitting a transcript with science grades, high school students hoping to study engineering for example may have to compile a portfolio of their science projects and demonstrate what they learned from them.

Lee said that by having students articulate their scholastic weaknesses and strengths, the University would be able to provide a better academic service, while being more cost-effective at the same time.

For example, if 30 percent of students in a biology class are not qualified to be there and 10 percent of them are overqualified, the University is not using its resources effectively, Lee said.

"The University and colleges will be more productive by channeling resources to specific needs, rather than blanketing resources to assumed needs of students," he said.

Channeling resources to the specific needs of students also will help to increase the low retention rate of college students, he said.

In other actions, the Board approved a one-time health insurance subsidy program which would provide a $400-per-month insurance premium subsidy for seven years for state and university employees who elect to take early retirement.

"This is a window of opportunity for faculty who are eligible to retire to do so and obtain assistance with their costs of health insurance," said Weldon Ihrig, vice chancellor for finance and administration at the Oregon State System for Higher Education.

have something to do with students of color," Warren said.

Warren said she would not be intimidated by racism on campus, as Collins-Puente spoke of during her resignation speech.

"I'm not going to let racism run me out of office," she said. "I'm not going to let any 'isms' run me out of office."

Warren said she has seen improvements, however small, in the racism situation on campus.

"If (Collins-Puente) claimed to be working for students of color for four years, then she should have seen some improvement," she said.

Warren said she hopes to improve the racism situation but not by leaps and bounds.

"I'm not asking for big jumps; I'm asking for small steps," she said.

OCA

in Amsterdam. "We just want people to watch Schindler's List and draw their own conclusions."

Treasurer of the NAACP, T.K. McDonald, said the movie shows many similarities between Hitler and the OCA. For example, Jewish books were burned in Nazi-Germany and the OCA is trying to ban books written by gay or lesbian authors. Another similarity, group members said, was the banning of Jewish professors in universities and the OCA's attempt to discriminate against gay and lesbian teachers.

"Hitler started in little steps, and one of those first steps was to degrade the Jewish community by removing Jewish professors from universities — much like the OCA attempted through Measure 9," Berg said.

McDonald said she opposes the OCA because she feels gays and lesbians won't be the only groups of people targeted by "hate politics." African-Americans could be next, she said.

"If one of us is oppressed, we are all down," MacDonald said. "If the OCA has its way, gays and lesbians will only be the first group."

David Gibson, a Jewish Eugene resident and owner of the McKenzie Theater in Springfield, said what happened in Nazi-Germany could happen again.

"I want to protect my children from a prejudice agenda," he said. "I don't want this to ever happen again."
