

ESPN could use Trice to liven up its draft coverage

On your mark. Get set. Write a column.

B.M.F.O.C. - Saturday at the Pepsi Team Invitational, Oregon's Eric Trice helped the Ducks nearly upset UCLA.

Trice, a junior who specializes in the long and triple jumps, took third in the long jump. Even more impressive was his performance in Oregon's 4x100-meter relay team.

Trice ran the first leg of the race and the Ducks went on to nip the Bruins at the wire. Trice was scheduled to compete in the triple jump as well, but was likely too burned out at that point.

And who can blame him? Besides his extensive action on Saturday, Trice's biggest accomplishment of the week came at Thursday night's Smoker boxing tournament.

DAVE CHARBONNEAU

In case you missed it, Trice stole the show, winning what amounted to the middleweight title after destroying three grossly overmatched competitors.

In the first match, Trice took care of his opponent in less than 30 seconds. In fact, the celebrating he and his buddies did after the fight lasted longer than the fight itself.

The second fight was a little closer, but Trice still won easily.

Then came the bomb. In the championship fight in the middleweight division, Trice took one punch to flatten his opponent like Gerry Cooney. It actually got scary after the guy had been on the floor, out cold for three or four minutes. Even Trice took a break from dancing around to see if the guy was going to come to.

The guy eventually got up, but it's safe to say he probably didn't go to Guido's for mugs afterwards.

Trice returned to Oregon this year after spending a year at Eastern Oregon State, where he batted .294 and stole 37 bases for the baseball team.

Hey, Eric. The football team needs a punter.

And with the 134th pick ...

ESPN breaks new barriers of boredom every spring when it televises the captivating NFL draft.

Sorry guys, but trying to make the NFL draft a media spectacle like the NBA draft just isn't going to work. Who wants to sit there through the 15-minute breaks each team gets to make a decision only to hear, "With the 11th pick, the Chicago Bears select John Thierry of Alcorn State." Whoopee!

Then you got "guest analyst" Mel Kiper Jr. up there turning beet red and absolutely ripping teams for making what he thinks are poor draft decisions. He jumped all over the Colts for passing on Fresno State quarterback Trent Dilfer, claiming they had a chance to get a franchise player in Dilfer.

What? Wasn't that what he was saying about Mr. Jeff George not so long ago? The Colts took his advice then and look what it got them. A quarterback who can't even decide whether to keep his mustache or not.

To make matters worse, ESPN2 showed the next 586 rounds all day yesterday. Thank God no one knows how to get that channel. Otherwise no one would have gone to school yesterday.

Bad Joke - Why don't the Cleveland Browns have an emblem on their helmet?

No one in Cleveland knows how to spell 'C'.

Good luck, Romeo.

Weeks 1-4 • June 20-July 15

This course will seek to trace the development of the German short narrative from the "template" of Boccaccio's Decameron, through Goethe's Novellen, authors of the 19th century (Gothelf, Hauptmann, Drost-Hulshoff, Raabe and others), to prose writers of the 20th century (Musil, Bachmann). Some work with Novellentheorie but primary emphasis on the texts themselves. Conducted in German. Fulfills major & minor requirements.
