Skye will mix the sounds of the Emerald City with the sounds of the Emerald Isle when they perform at the Willamette Valley Folk Festival this weekend.

Musicians reach for the Skye

What do you get when you mix the sounds of the Emerald Isle and the Emerald City at the Willamette Valley Folk festival?

You get the Eugene quartet Skye, who blend contemporary elements into traditional celtic music.

"We try to take a traditional song, bring in some contemporary cords or rifts and make it something new," said Lexy Wellman of Skye.

Skye will preform their own brand of celtic music at 5 p.m. Sunday at this year's festival with a few new twists. Michael Kevin Daly, who writes many of the quartet's songs, has a new mandolin and will be trying some things with that. Skye promises to give some variety to the festival audience with haunting ballads and fast paced instrumentation.

"When we get going on the instruments and vocals things get cooking pretty good," Wellman said.

Among the original music being performed by Skye is Daly's song "Gypsy Heartbeat."

"The song something every one can relate to," Wellman said. "We all have a little gypsy in us."

Daly and Julia Heydon, who plays fiddle, guitar, recorder for Skye, started playing together first in 1983 as Northern Road. Later they became Skye and Michael Bardossi joined in 1989. Bardossi is a classically trained violinist, who plays everything from celtic to jazz. Wellman the latest edition to Skye.

Skye has played at a many local venues including past Willamette Valley Folk festivals. This St. Patrick's Day Skye opened for Scottish singer-song writer Dougie MacLean at the Wow Hall. Skye also recorded their own album, "Lighting and Thunder" in 1992.

Music heals soul,
sends global message

Local musical talent Virginia Cohen will be performing this weekend at the Willamette Valley Folk Festival. Cohen latest release is titled Moving into Indigo, she has plans to release a second album this summer, it will be called Long Migration.

Cohen considers her musical strength to be her song writing into which she brings both personal and historical subject matter. Rhythmic guitar and and truthful lyrics define the Cohen's music. The music emphasizes strength and self-healing. Cohen also tries to incorporate global issues into her music. Cohen will be playing on Friday at 4p.m.
