

Sampras' winning game is so perfect that he bores fans

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Pete Sampras wins tennis matches with such brute force that fans might find it boring to watch.

Sampras played the power game at its best or at its worst, depending on your point of view — as he beat Goran Ivanisevic 7-6 (7-2), 7-6 (7-5), 6-0 Sunday for his second straight Wimbledon title and fifth Grand Slam championship.

There was little subtlety in this match. Both men fired serves at close to 130 mph, with Ivanisevic hitting 25 aces and Sampras 17. The Croatian served 16 aces in the first set, with at least two in each game.

There were no breaks of serve until the third set, when Ivanisevic wilted and Sampras broke three times. On more than half of the 206 points in the match, the serve was not returned in play. Few points had rallies of more than three shots and none more than six.

The match had little of the tension or emotion of Saturday's women's final in which Conchita Martinez beat Martina Navratilova in three sets to deny her a 10th title in her 22nd and final Wimbledon appearance.

The 22-year-old Sampras is a brilliant player, perhaps the best of his generation, but Sunday's bang-boom tennis generated little enthusiasm from a subdued Centre Court audience. It may not have been a coincidence that Princess Diana left the Royal Box after the second set and missed the third.

But Sampras was quick to defend the quality of play. "I thought the tennis was very high class," he said. "Maybe you're not seeing a lot of long rallies, but it's tough to hit a serve that hard in a matter of three or four inches. It's very difficult to do."

"For so many years the British public were seeing (Bjorn) Borg playing from the baseline," he said. "But when you have two guys over 6 feet tall with huge serves, you're not going to see a lot of rallies."

Storybook career has sad ending, but Navratilova "goes out in style"

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — It was a storybook Wimbledon for Martina Navratilova, except for the ending.

In her last singles tournament at the All England Club, Navratilova seized Wimbledon and made the event a personal crusade. She was determined, she said, "to go out in style," and by reaching the finals, that's exactly what she did.

At the end, though, Conchita Martinez would not succumb to the sea of sentiment that wanted one more Wimbledon title for the nine-time champion. Instead, she defeated her idol 6-4, 3-6, 6-3, becoming the first Spanish winner of the women's title at Wimbledon.

And when it was over, she wasn't quite sure how to react.

"It was very hard out there because I knew she was so excited to win her 10th Wimbledon," Martinez said. "I am really sorry to beat her, but I'm really pleased that I did."

Navratilova could understand the mixed emotions. She had them, too.

"I'm very sad," she said, "but I would have been sad anyway, even if I'd won. It wasn't the ending I was hoping for."
