

Summer camper injured during ballgame

An eight-year-old Eugene boy was hit in the head with a baseball bat Tuesday morning while playing in the upper field adjacent to Hayward Field. According to the Office of Public Safety, the child was hit while playing catcher without a mask. The boy, who was still conscious, was taken to Sacred Heart Hospital, where he received stitches. He was then released to his father.

According to OPS and the University News Bureau, the ball game in which the boy was injured was part of a summer camp program for children taking place on the University campus.

ments in the state. Until a few years ago, most clubs paid minimum wage. Now most clubs hire dancers as independent contractors.

Hansen paid his dancers minimum wage at Jiggles, on West 11th Avenue and the Great Alaska Bush Company, on Highway 99, until February 1992.

The claimants allege that Hansen failed to pay the minimum wage of $4.75 for all hours worked during a one to two year period.

According to a press release from the BLI, one of the tests to see if a worker is an employee rather than an independent contractor is if "the employer's business operations regularly require the services in question."

Said Stevens-Schwenger, "you can't have a nude dancing club without nude dancers," and by that criterion, the dancers qualify as employees.

Furthermore, to be an independent contractor, a person must provide "a skill or service that is not normally found in the employer's business operation."

Hansen, who could not be reached for comment, contests the BLI's findings that he must pay $144,000 in back wages and another $23,690 in penalty wages. He is requesting a court trial.

Hansen told The Register-Guard that he will be managing a new sports bar at the former site of Lollipop's, a topless club for 18-year-olds and older. Lollipop's, the first club of its kind in the nation, was owned by Hansen before it went out of business.

According to The Register-Guard, Hansen will not be owning the Hog's Breathe Saloon and Sports Grill because of his wage war with the BLI.

"I feel confident that I'm going to win (the dispute)," he told the newspaper, "but I don't feel comfortable owning anything new right now."

"For every American who followed your journey, especially for those of us who were young on that fateful day 25 years ago, and for the young Americans who still dream dreams of a future in space, we thank you all," the president said.

For the astronauts invited to the ceremony, it was not so much an anniversary as a reunion. They represented the glory days of space: Alan Shepard, whose 15-minute flight was America's first; John Glenn, who first wore the American flag in orbit around the globe; James Lovell, whose Apollo 13 ship was crippled by explosion 200,000 miles out, and John Young, whose record six flights spanned the Gemini, Apollo and space shuttle programs.

Ten of the 12 men who walked on the moon were present. Not attending were Harrison Schmitt, the geologist who flew on the last moon mission, Apollo 17 in 1972, and James B. Irwin, who died in 1991.

"There were more astronauts in there than I've seen for many, many years," said Glenn after the ceremony.
