A SECOND CHANCE

As a result of Fisher's controversial rule, programs that are "zero-funded," usually as a result of not following budget-request guidelines, will have to muster 14 of the 18 senator votes to win a special request.

"In the past there was no policy on how to handle people who were zero-funded because of their ineptitude," Fisher said. "They should be held responsible for their inability to get their act together."

Several programs, including Amazon Community Tenants, which is expected to submit a special request to the Senate on Wednesday night, failed to turn in budgets on time last year and now hope to direct funding into their empty coffers.

"The program would have to convince those three-fourths (of senators) that maybe it's not their fault that they didn't do their job last year," explained Fisher.

The Senate decided to change this process because groups that were zero-funded by the Incidental Fee Committee last year may complain that funding is decided by a new process and it was their directors last year who couldn't get it together, not them.

Beginning this year, three finance committees and the Senate will determine the allocation of the more than $5 million in student fees that the University will collect this year. The now-defunct IFC previously approved the budgets of the EMU, the Athletic Department and the ASUO programs.

Failure to appear for a scheduled special request hearing will result in a denial of the request, unless 24 hours' notice is given to the Senate chair of president pro-tem.

EASY TO REACH

New positions, that the Senate hopes will improve communication between students, faculty and senators, were approved at Thursday's meeting.

A Senate ombudsman will be responsible for scheduling and staffing grievance tables in the EMU. The tables serve as a place where students can register complaints. For example, if students have a problem with a member of the faculty and don't feel comfortable taking their problem to someone in that school or department, they can approach their senator with their concerns.

This right would have been impossible in the past because no one knew who his or her senator was, according to Fisher.

"The job of the ombudsman is to make sure that the students and the Senate find each other," said Rhinard.

Sen. John Howe was elected this year's ombudsman by the Senate.

New public relations duties will be part of the president pro-tem's job. The president pro-tem, who assumes the responsibilities of the ASUO president and vice president, will be in charge of press releases and publicizing the Senate.

"I think in the past the Senate was run in obscurity," said Fisher as he explained the need for this position.

of people from the Bay area already."

Buch said the admissions office uses a variety of tactics to recruit students to the University in a variety of areas across the country, including high school visits and direct mail. In addition to the 12 western states, recruiting efforts are being made in New England and the Mid-Atlantic states.

University officials said the heavy recruitment of out-of-state students began as a means to make up for budget shortfalls from measure five budget cuts.

Out-of-state students pay 100 percent of education costs, while in-state students pay only a portion of the actual cost, with the state general fund making up for the rest.

Buch said it's difficult to judge whether the tuition increase has had a significant effect on enrollment.

"If there had been a dramatic affect, we would have seen a sharp drop," he said. "Total enrollment numbers suggest that's not happening."
