don were upset by the replacement of the fence, while others speculated as to why it was replaced.

The University "is becoming more concrete and less grass," said University student Dave Sullivan, who was upset that the fence was installed.

Sullivan said fencing a particular area at Condon Hall was only symbolic. "We're standing on the ground no matter where we are," he said.

Tony Silva, a Eugene resident, agreed. "If (the fence) is there to help the grass grow then it's OK, but if it is there to keep people away," then it is bad, he said.

The University Physical Plant installed a cyclone fence along one side of Condon Hall to discourage loitering around the building.
