WILCOX

match or swimming with sharks are just a few of the things that make up the man behind the number 90.

"I love pro wrestling," Wilcox said. "I just want to try different things. I just want to have fun."

Ironically, Wilcox got his big break when Tate, his friend and teacher, left the team mysteriously after the 1993 season.

Plenty of pressure was heaped upon Wilcox to replace the reliable Tate, but Wilcox has responded and squelched the Tate talk with his steady and versatile play.

Wilcox doesn't necessarily like the way things transpired, but realizes that it doesn't matter how he was thrust into starting action, it's time to get the job done.

"I was sad to see Willy go because he was a hell of a ballplayer," Wilcox said. "But I just couldn't sit around and let it bother me, and I think I've done a good job of not letting it bother me."

"I think it hurt me more than anybody. I learned from him, and I had fun playing with him.

We would have been a pretty good tight-end combo in the Pac-10."

No matter what anybody thinks about Wilcox either personally or from a playing standpoint, one thing that clearly transcends all of his traits is his desire to win and compete.

"It's kind of weird," Oregon flanker Pat Johnson said. "Josh is quiet all week, but when game time comes, he's all hyped and getting everybody up for the game."

"I can't stand losing," Wilcox concluded.
