Turnovers and special teams blunders were once again a deciding factor in this year's Civil War including Matt Belden's blocked punt.

It's not often that it happens, but one series of plays between the Oregon Ducks and the Oregon State Beavers in Saturday's Civil War summed up both team's seasons.

Over three and a half quarters of nose-to-nose football set up yet another improbable Duck victory in this 1994 season.

With 4:42 left on the clock in the fourth quarter and the Beavers leading Oregon 13-10, the Ducks began their Civil War-path to the Rose Bowl.

A bruised and battered Danny O'Neil stepped in at quarterback on his own 29-yard line and looked for his favorite target, flanker Cristin McLemore. McLemore, who had missed most of the third and fourth quarter due to a wrist injury, had returned with a heavily bandaged left wrist and a determined step in his gimp stride.

On first down, O'Neil dropped back and hit McLemore perfectly on a crossing pattern from the right slot to the left hash mark for a 31-yard gain, putting the Ducks in Oregon State territory at their 39-yard line.

The next play found O'Neil hooking up

Latest battle similar to 1993 War at Autzen

The 1994 Civil War game was so reminiscent of last year's game it was almost eerie. Hyped-up and much celebrated, the game featured numerous missed opportunities that could have spelled doom for either team, and eventually did for the Oregon State Beavers. But for the Oregon Ducks, the game was an upbeat and turned-around remake of last year's Oregon classic.

As was last year, the game-time temperature was below 40 degrees, and light rain sprinkled the crowd of 37,010, providing, at times, for sloppy play, including a missed fumble opportunity for the Ducks and a last drive stumble by Oregon State quarterback Don Shanklin.

With memories of Tommy Thompson's Civil War punting woes lingering in the minds of Duck fans going into the game, the second quarter almost turned out to be a recurring nightmare. Actually, it was a recurring nightmare, only this time the Ducks were able to wake up before it was too late.

The Ducks had a 7-0 lead when they had to punt the ball away from their own nine-yard line. But when it was all said and done, the Ducks were looking at just a one point lead after Larry Bumpus and turned into an Oregon State touchdown.
