RECRUITING

in out-of-state students.

"Certainly, (recruiting more out-of-state students) is the funding plan for the University and the state," said James Buch, director of the Office of Admissions. "But we need to ensure that in this process, we don't set ourselves apart from the state of Oregon."

"We still are and will always be at the core of Oregon," Buch said.

The University does consider prospective residents and out-of-state students who have lower than 3.0 GPAs using a combination of high school GPAs and either the SAT scores or the American College Test scores.

Some resident students said they feel betrayed by the University's increased recruitment of out-of-state students.

"It's not completely fair because this is the best economical option for Oregon students," said Alex Jamieson, a resident history major. "My Californian house-mates complain that they have to pay too much to come here; well, my tuition is going up too."

Some said Oregon universities have an obligation to residents first.

"Oregon schools should be primarily for Oregon students," said resident Carrie Brogoitti, a junior in English. "If Oregon students begin to be turned away to admit out-of-state students, then that isn't fair."

Keith Cunningham, an English major from California, said the dependence on out-of-state tuition is a disadvantage to resident students.

"It's a survival technique for universities," said Cunningham. "It's the in-state students who suffer because they are making more room for out-of-state students, so, the in-state students are getting cut off."

Does he feel guilty about coming here from California?

"I think it's the voters of Oregon that should have the moral dilemma because they are putting higher education as such a low priority," Cunningham said.

Cunningham added that he refers to the University as the "University of California at Eugene," noting the large number of California students.

California students are heavily recruited. 2,252 (17 percent) of undergraduates admitted last fall came from California. Washington residents followed with 381, and Hawaii is third with 237 admitted fall term.

However, the University's energy is not solely focused on recruiting non-residents. In the fall, recruiters began visiting 200 state high schools, and various recruiting activities are planned throughout the year.

Buch said out-of-state students bring diversity to the campus community. On the other hand, he said the state needs to change a number of its operations and citizens need to focus on constructing an effective tax base that would help fund universities.

Nicole Commissiong, a history and journalism double-major from Canada, said out-of-state recruiting is necessary. Commissiong, who is on a track scholarship, said while Canadians pay high taxes, students pay next to nothing for school.

"If you want services, you have to pay for them and one way for a state to pay for them is through taxes," she said. "If you're not willing to pay for education, you can't complain."

University recruiter Tara Carpenter said whether they are residents or out-of-state students, she just tries to get them to go to school.

"The expectations (to recruit out-of-state) haven't changed, but the numbers have changed," Carpenter said. "We've always wanted diversity, but when you throw in the financial component, it makes sense (that we need to recruit more out-of-state students)."

EUGENE CITY BREWERY

AUGUST 11, 1994 EUGENE WEEKLY

BREW
 Robert Wolfe

A close runner-up is the India Pale Ale. Made in a traditional style, the India Ale achieves great balance between sweetness and lots of hops. The long finish is showy and satisfying.

ECB beers sport a richer, maltier body, more hop bitterness, and fresher hop flavors.

The ECB Orca Pale Ale, a longtime standard for the brewery, is also showing improvement from the changes. A fruity, floral aroma rises from the creamy head of the golden, summertime treat. Medium bodied, dry, and bitter, this is a fine example of what a pale ale should be.

In short, the Eugene City Brewery is a brand-new ball game - and the beers there deserve your renewed attention.
