49er assistant tabs Broncos

DENVER (AP) — This time, Denver Broncos owner Pat Bowlen didn't let Mike Shanahan get away. Shanahan, architect of the offense that carried the San Francisco 49ers to their record fifth Super Bowl title, was hired Tuesday night as coach of the Broncos.

"Deep down inside me, I always wanted this job," said Shanahan, who succeeds the fired Wade Phillips.

Shanahan was Bowlen's first choice to succeed Dan Reeves in 1993, but they couldn't agree on contract terms, and Bowlen turned to Phillips instead. After compiling a 16-17 record in two seasons, Phillips was fired on Dec. 29.

"Two years ago, I just felt the timing wasn't right," Shanahan said. "I felt I needed to prove myself more. Now, it feels perfect. I feel very comfortable with the situation. It was easy to say 'yes.'"

Shanahan, who emerged as the hottest coaching prospect in the league during the 49ers' championship drive, signed a seven-year deal believed to be worth at least $7 million.

"This is a long-term commitment on both Mike's part and my part, a seven-year deal," Bowlen said at a news conference. "Mike will have full control of the football operation, which is the way I want it to be."

Shanahan, 42, who served for seven seasons as a Denver assistant, said it was "great to be back home again. I'm happy to be back as part of the family."

Shanahan arrived in Denver by private jet Tuesday afternoon and was whisked to Broncos headquarters. He spent three hours talking with Bowlen.

during which an agreement was reached.

Shanahan had earlier talked with the Philadelphia Eagles about their vacant head coaching position, and the 49ers reportedly were prepared to make a hefty offer to keep him.

Shanahan already was the NFL's highest-paid assistant at $425,000 a year. It was reported in San Francisco that a 49ers' offer might include the promise that Shanahan would become that team's head coach in three years, at which time George Seifert, now 55, would move into the front office.

He said the lure of the Denver job overshadowed any other offers.

Shanahan refused to speculate on potential assistants, except to say he would like to bring 49ers quarterbacks coach Gary Kubiak to Denver.

An NFL source confirmed Shanahan has contacted former New York Jets head coach Pete Carroll about becoming his defensive coordinator. Another possible hire is former Oklahoma coach Gary Gibbs, who said he has talked with Shanahan within the last few weeks. Gibbs and Shanahan worked together as graduate assistants at Oklahoma in 1975 and have remained friends.

Shanahan's first pro coaching experience came with the Broncos. He served two stints totaling seven seasons from 1984-87 and 1989-91, mostly as offensive coordinator. In between, he went 8-12 as head coach of the Los Angeles Raiders before being fired four games into his second season.

Shanahan was fired by Reeves after the 1991 season after Reeves accused him of conspiring with John Elway to make game-plan changes.
