mental studies as a major and to continue to fund the environmental studies program.

The program will not hire new professors to teach courses. Instead they will use University professors who will split their time between other departments and the environmental studies program.

Gale said the response to the proposed major has been positive from both students and faculty.

"Right now, we have the names of 50 people on campus who say they are interested in environmental studies and the number is growing every day," Gale said.

the company's plan since its beginning, and students had been requesting a store closer to the University for some time.

Taste of Germany, located on Alder Street, closed in January.

Some of the changes on East 13th Avenue have not been positive. Many businesses have relocated elsewhere or simply gone out of business.

Bob Lee, who has operated Face the Music on East 13th for more than 12 years, said it seemed like a lot more storefronts had changed in the last 12 months.

"I don't remember ever having this much change in a similar period of time," Lee said.

"A lot of people [starting a new business on East 13th] overestimate what they can do down here," Lee said. "I don't think most people know what the students want or need."

Another business on East 13th, Crispins Import Gallery, closed suddenly Tuesday night, and the owner was unavailable for comment.

"I walked by this morning and it was empty," Lee said Wednesday afternoon.

Kaufman's, a women's clothing store located on East 13th Avenue for more than 20 years, closed last fall.

"The area no longer supports that kind of retail," said Hugh Prichard, leasing broker for East 13th Avenue Partners.

According to Prichard, East 13th used to get more business from the Eugene community, in addition to students. Prichard said parking difficulty is now Betsy Gedatus is one student who has been banking on the new major for her graduation at the end of next fall. "I know if this doesn't pass, I'm going to have to find another major fast," Gedatus said.

She said she was almost ready to transfer to a university that offered a major in environmental studies until she talked to Gale about his plans to propose the major.

Gedatus said she knows of students who left the University or never came because it did not have an environmental studies major.

John Moseley, provost and vice president of academic affairs, said he believes the new major is designed for the students' benefit.

"We think this is something where there is a lot of demand," he said.

Oregon State University has an environmental sciences major but Gale said the University's major will be different from Oregon State's, which has a greater emphasis in natural sciences. He said the environmental studies major at the University is more of a broad-based liberal arts education.

Under the new major, four additional classes will be added to the environmental studies program. Three new introductory courses will be required for all majors, each focusing on one of three areas: social sciences, natural sciences and the humanities.

a deterrent to customers.

"It's a very University-related district," Prichard said. "Anything that goes in [on East 13th Avenue] must be directed at University students."

Prichard said East 13th Avenue Partners is looking to change the look and feel of the area.

"We're interested in upgrading the area," he said. "We're not in a big hurry to slam someone in. We want to make the block a nice shopping district."

Sandino's, a restaurant which took the place of the mEating Place a year ago, closed during winter break.

Joyce Assadourian, who co-owned the mEating Place with her husband, Vahan, for the seven and a half years the restaurant was open, was upset with the fate of Sandino's.

According to Assadourian, the owners of Sandino's left owing them $68,000. The Assadourians will hold an auction to sell the restaurant's equipment on Feb. 8.

Sandino's downfall was due to mismanagement, she said.

"They didn't keep the place up," she said. "It was just filthy."

The owner of Sandino's, David Camacho-Easter, has left Eugene and could not be reached for comment.

According to Assadourian, many businesses have left East 13th because of rent increases by the East 13th Avenue Partners who own many of the buildings on the street.

"It's unconscionable what they're doing," she said. "They are trying to make a killing in business, but students don't have that kind of money."

■ CORRECTION

In Wednesday's Emerald (Feb. 1) it was reported that C.J. Pepper's serves hamburgers. The restaurant does not serve any red meat. Also, the owners of the restaurant are Dan Vishney and Craig Leadon.

The RIM results also contained an error. In Division III Mens, Pikes defeated ATO 54-39.

The Emerald regrets the errors.
