New coach lands two volleyball recruits

A two-time all-league player from California's central coast and the player of the year in the Puget Sound area have signed national letters of intent to attend Oregon and play volleyball, first-year head coach Cathy Nelson announced Tuesday.

Allison White from Los Gatos, Calif., and Tanya Minion of Puyallup, Wash., will join the Ducks in August for preseason drills.

"We feel that both Tanya and Allison will be big keys to the future of Oregon volleyball," Nelson said. "They both are tremendous athletes with good volleyball experience. Both players could make an impact on our team next season, and we look for big things during their careers here."

White, a 6-foot middle blocker/outside hitter from Los Gatos High School was a two-time central coast selection. As team MVP this fall, she helped Los Gatos advance to the final four and was part of the 1993 state championship squad.

"Allison plays very big at the net and with a great deal of power. She will be pushing for playing time as a freshman. She plays for one of the best club teams in the country and routinely plays against tremendous competition, which will make her transition to college ball easier," Nelson said.

Minion, a 5-foot-10 outside hitter/middle blocker, was the Puget Sound Player of the Year.

The league MVP while at Puyallup's Rogers High School, she was a two-time all-conference selection and earned all-state honors as a senior. As team captain and the offensive player of the year, she holds eight school records.

"Tanya is a fierce competitor and an excellent athlete," Nelson said. "Her backcourt skills are refined, and she plays much bigger than her actual size. We look for her to play a big part in our rebuilding process."

New Miami Heat owners fire coach Loughery

MIAMI (AP) — When Micky Arison's family completed a deal to buy the struggling Miami Heat, he said he'd bring fast, sweeping changes.

He wasn't kidding.

The day after the NBA Board of Governors approved the sale, Arison hired Dave Wohl the team's executive vice president of basketball operations. Within hours, Wohl replaced head coach Kevin Loughery with his assistant, Alvin Gentry.

"It was my feeling that the team was not going in the direction that we would like it to go," said Wohl, who was a Heat assistant in the expansion team's first three seasons. "And I felt Kevin wasn't having a whole lot of fun doing it."

Both Wohl and Gentry described the removal of Loughery as "difficult." Wohl has known him for 20 years; Loughery brought Gentry into the franchise.

"It's really kind of an unbelievable Catch-22 for me," Gentry said. "Kevin hired me here. It was a very, very tough situation, seeing Kevin leave."

Wohl told Loughery he was out after Tuesday morning's practice. Loughery, 54, who led the Heat to the playoffs two of the last three seasons, was offered a position as vice president for player personnel. It was not immediately known if Loughery would stay with the team.

The shakeup came one day after the NBA approved the sale to the family of Carnival Cruise Lines founder Ted Arison.

Micky Arison, Ted's son, said all along he would look for an upbeat candidate to run the daily basketball operations, of which he wants no part. He found that in Wohl.

Wohl, 45, coached the New Jersey Nets from 1985-87. He was an assistant coach in Sacramento in 1992-93 and in Los Angeles in 1993-94.

Wohl recalled that when he was with the Heat for its first few years the team set goals and sought to achieve them. He said that hasn't happened lately.

"I think in the last two years, the goals have been somewhat either muffled or not stated clearly enough," Wohl said.

Loughery compiled a 133-159 record in three years with the Heat.

Loughery, then an assistant with the Atlanta Hawks, took over the Heat in 1991 for his sixth NBA coaching job. He had been head coach of the Hawks from 1981-83 and also coached the Philadelphia 76ers, New Jersey Nets, Chicago Bulls and Washington Bullets. He took the New York Nets to an American Basketball Association championship.
