bers of the squad eventually earned All-State honors. Our offense was explosive and the defense was like a vise. Admission was never a problem because the games were always entertaining.

As acknowledged as the team was, it never won a state championship for one simple reason. Every year in the state playoffs we would lose to a squad chiseled and composed as a team. They would always make that extra pass, provide that critical help-defense needed and come up with that special something that translates into a victory.

Not a day goes by that I don't wonder what might have been. Not a day that I don't think of how nice it would be to have your name etched in some school history. Not a day that I don't want a chance to do it all over again.

And that is exactly what I don't want any of the Oregon players to have to live with.

This Oregon team has just the right mixture of talent, enthusiasm and experience to throw a wrench in many school's hopes for a national championship. This team, this year. For several members of the Ducks, there will be no next year. And for holdovers next year, they might not ever find themselves in the opportunistic spot the team is in now. Too many crazy things can happen year-to-year in the wacky world of collegiate basketball.

Oregon has quality players from the starting five to the reserves, but none of them will ever fulfill their ultimate capabilities without help from the others. That type of overwhelming talent is very rare in college basketball.

When all is said and done, the scoreboard is never going to read Orlando Williams or Jesse Coulter 59-49 over Arizona or Arizona State. It will always read Oregon.

When the final whistle blows, the game is over. There are no second chances. Make the most of what you have when the opportunity is there because when it's over, there is nothing left but regret or fond memories. The choice is yours.
