which appeared very loose and unconcerned about the matchup with Oregon.

And in the end, along with some suffocating Longhorn pressure defense, it was this experienced and relaxed nature that overwhelmed Oregon.

"Texas was a veteran team in the NCAA tournament so they knew how to win," Oregon forward Henry Madden said. "They knew how aggressive you have to be and what the refs will let you get away with."

Oregon and Texas played through an intense and sometimes sloppy first half and came out of the locker room for the second half with only two points separating the two teams.

But it was the Longhorns who were able to capitalize in the second half as they were able to stretch their lead to 12 points with 11:25 to go in the game. The lead grew to 20 points when Oregon went the next four minutes without a basket.

For the game, Oregon shot an icy 38 percent from the floor, including a pathetic 7 for 33 from beyond the three-point arc.

"It's real frustrating when you have great looks at the basket, and you just can't get them to fall," Madden said.

Orlando Williams led the team with 23 points and Zach Sellers chipped in 13 points to go with his team-leading 10 rebounds.

But it was Kenya Wilkins who was the real tournament inspiration for the Ducks.

The sophomore point guard split the Texas pressure time and again and dished off many open opportunities for his teammates. Wilkins finished the game with a remarkable nine assists to only three turnovers in 32 minutes of intense pressure.

"Kenya did a great job, and he's definitely going to be one of the top guards in the Pac-10 in the near future," Williams said.

Despite the loss, the Oregon season was a successful one, as many players were quick to point out following the Texas game.

"It's always disappointing to lose," said Oregon forward Jeff Potter, "but I hope no one takes the loss and says that we had a disappointing season. I think we accomplished a lot."

Texas' point guard Terrence Rencher certainly agreed with the tournament hype that said Oregon's success was for real.

"Oregon is a helluva club," Rencher said. "I knew we'd have to give all we had to beat them, and I'm glad its over."

The first-round loss ended the Oregon careers of eight seniors but not the hopes for future successes in Eugene.

"I'm going to be really ready for next year," Madden said. "I have two more years, and hopefully we will do better next year and accomplish more than we did this year."

The quick guard duo of Texas kept the Ducks busy for most of the game as the much-heralded Longhorn tandem was a key factor in Texas' first-round victory over Oregon.
