FINAL

the Final Four "is much more than dollars and cents," said Washington athletic director Barbara Hedges, who shares the committee chairmanship with Buller.

"It's the focus on Seattle, the focus on the university, not only from television but the thousands of people who will be coming into the city," Hedges said.

"Our goal is we want to put on a spectacular event so people will want to come back and will recognize the value of returning to Seattle."

New NCAA rules and restrictions have toned down the event some. There are limits now on local spending. Corporations and businesses that contribute no longer get free tickets or use of the Final Four logo. Lavish parties and bottomless corporate coffers are a thing of the past.

But with 35,000 visitors, 17,000 hotel-room bookings and five days of celebration, Seattle should come out about $30.8 million ahead, said Peter Lin of the state Revenue Department.

Not the $40 million of 1984 or the $45 million of 1989. But not peanuts, either.

"This crowd does have a tendency to spend money," Buller said.

"It is strictly manna from heaven from our standpoint, and it couldn't have come at a better time," said Mick McHugh, owner of FX McRory's Steak, Chop and Oyster House near the Kingdome.

His business is still recovering from the July-to-November dead zone, when the Kingdome was closed for $50 million in emergency roof repairs that have passed muster with the NCAA and the host committee.

"Six years ago we can vividly recall every minute of every day the Final Four was here," McHugh said. "It's an absolutely tremendous event. Everybody is upbeat and enjoying themselves."

He plans to bring in 38 additional employees this year. He also has a catering contract for a party of 900 on Pier 48 sponsored by the Adidas shoe company.
