

REEVES

State. Sutton said he had hoped Reeves could contribute by the time he was a sophomore.

But Reeves was starting as a freshman and was Big Eight player of the year the next season. As a junior, he hit a halfcourt shot at the buzzer to send a game against Missouri into overtime. He set a school record with 20 rebounds, along with 30 points, in a win over Kansas this year.

Big Country kept getting bigger.

"His whole career has been like a fairytale," said Carolyn Reeves, who flew on an airplane for the first time when the family traveled to Baltimore for East regional wins over Drexel and Alabama. "I never dreamed he would get this far."

The townsfolk, aware that Reeves had potential because of his size alone, also admit being a little surprised at how much he has developed. Frank Anglen held his hand to knee-level to show how long he's known Reeves, then smiled as he gradually raised his hand as high as he can.

Anglen pointed beyond his house to a slab of concrete in a field where Reeves once played — it was the only basketball court in town besides the high school gym. Sutton and his assistants once urged Reeves to go to the "big city" to find off-season competition and hone his game. Reeves went to Sallisaw.

"He couldn't play with anyone around here," Anglen said. "But everyone knew from the time he was a teen-ager that he was going to play, because he started growing and kept growing."

trying to rob Shotkoski when the ballplayer tried to get away. Witnesses said the assailant fled on a mountain bike. Police said it was the first homicide in that area.

Officers quickly focused on Evans, who goes by the street name of "1000" and has the number tattooed on his right arm. "We heard about him. We knew he was out on the street," English said.

They cornered him in an abandoned warehouse Sunday and arrested him on the parole violation and began to build a case against him in Shotkoski's death. English said a $5,000 reward put up by the Braves and matched by police prompted some acquaintances of Evans to begin to talk.

English said it was learned Evans watched a police news conference announcing the reward on television and told a friend "I'm the one they are looking for" and asked his friend not to turn him in for the money.

English said the .22-caliber revolver has been found.
