style employed under former ASUO President Bobby Lee during 1992-93.

"I learned a lot from Bobby," said Kantrowitz, who was an ASUO intern during Lee's administration. "He was very approachable. The reason they were as effective as they were, is because students could talk to them."

"You knew who was president and vice president," Scott said. "A lot of students don't have any idea who is [the current] president or vice president."

Kantrowitz and Scott also are concerned about the attacks on student groups, and the movement to eliminate the mandatory student fee process.

"Student programing has never been attacked such as it has [this year]," Kantrowitz said. "The school went out on a limb to let students have ultimate control of their [incidental] fees. The University has a really special thing that I would never wanna see destroyed."

It is the responsibility of the ASUO Executive, especially the president and vice president, to stand up for student groups, Kantrowitz said.

Kantrowitz and Scott said they would be a breath of fresh air, and a break from the recent series of ASUO presidents who worked in the ASUO office before running for the executive seats.

"That's what perpetuates bureaucracy," Kantrowitz said. "They continue running the office in such a way that it really doesn't ever change."

Kantrowitz, a political science major and business minor, holds a student senate finance seat. Despite his active role in student government, Kantrowitz said he doesn't have any political aspirations beyond the University.

"I am a student and I realize that," he said. "Students are my first priority. Your relationship should be with the students, and the administration secondary."

Scott, a business administration major and women's studies minor, is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, and is active within the Greek system. She said her membership in the Panhellenic Council and other University programs has kept her on top of student concerns and women's issues.

"I know people, I know the issues, and I think I know what students want — in some ways better than people who have been isolated in office," she said. "Women are the majority of this campus. I want us to be heard."

As leaders of the ASUO Executive, Kantrowitz and Scott said they would let students know what is happening with their tuition and other fees, and get them to work on those issues.

One example they propose is to have an intern who would modify the ASUO's current web page, and update it daily.

"We don't need to pay someone to do it," Kantrowitz said. "There are people out there who want to learn to use this stuff, and we're saying you can learn to use it and do something that has a great deal of responsibility."

"I think students will see us as responsible people that remember they're students," he said. "I think one of the things students dislike about student government [leaders] is that they feel they are a class above. We don't. We're just people."

LOOK WHO'S ON THE TICKET

Chris Kantrowitz and Niki Scott are running for ASUO president and vice president, respectively.

QUALIFICATIONS

KANTROWITZ

Kantrowitz is a member of the Student Senate and the Programs Finance Committee. He has served on the EMU Board of Directors and interned in Washington D.C. for six months with a U.S. Senator.

SCOTT

Scott is the co-coordinator of Greeks Against Rape, a delegate to the Panhellenic Council, a peer advisor in the University's School of Business and a FIG leader.

PLATFORM

Kantrowitz and Scott will re-open student government by increasing student participation in the ASUO. They will maintain state funding of the University, and will work to protect the incidental fee process and student group funding. They plan to make student government more visible by working closely with students and student groups.
