LOOK WHO'S ON THE TICKET

Justin Good and Thom Schoenborn are running for ASUO president and vice president, respectively.

QUALIFICATIONS

GOOD
has worked on the Commentator staff for two years.

Good is a member of the Student Senate and the associate publisher of the Oregon Commentator. He is the editor of the Commentator and a cadet in the ROTC. He is also a reverend in the Universal Life Church.

Schoenborn is the editor of the Commentator and a cadet in the ROTC. He is also a reverend in the Universal Life Church.

PLATFORM

Good and Schoenborn advocate giving individual students direct control over which groups are funded by their incidental fees. They would like to do away with stipends for members of student groups and increase parking on campus.

groups that don't serve anybody wouldn't get any funding. It would be much more fair," he said.

As a member of the ASUO Student Senate, Good said he saw funds allocated to several groups that don't function on campus. He said his decision to run for ASUO Executive was partially based on his frustration at one Student Senate meeting, where an increase in the EMU's funding was approved in spite of obvious shortcomings in the way the union is being run at several levels.

"I was infuriated with the EMU," he said. "It really needs improvement. It could be [run] so much better."

A brewery would bring revenue in to the EMU and would help augment the EMU's budget, which "sucks in" one third of all student incidental fees, Good said.

Good and Schoenborn's goals also include increasing parking, equity in parking permit distribution and advocating smokers' rights.

A recently proposed California clean air act that would ban smoking in nearly all indoor facilities has made it more important to actively advocate smokers' rights, Good said.

"There are recreational areas where you should be able to smoke," he said. "Because of the [California legislation], it is important to have a smoking advocate here. I'm afraid that Oregon will follow suit."

Good and Schoenborn, both sophomores, have been on the staff of the conservative journal of opinion the Oregon Commentator for two years. Schoenborn, who is the editor, said being on the newspaper has enabled the pair to "study student government." The publication regularly runs articles analyzing and often criticizing student government. Good is the assistant publisher of the paper.

The two candidates prefer to be known as "Doctor J. Edward Good" and "Reverend Thom Schoenborn," because Schoenborn recently received his clerical ordination through a mail-order form he found in the back of Rolling Stone magazine.

Schoenborn, now legally a reverend in the Universal Life Church, said he can perform legally binding marriages, baptisms and other religious services.

One of their campaign strategies is to get people to vote. Good said he would like to see a record-breaking voter turnout this year, no matter which way the ballots are cast.
