Andy Murk proudly displays the picture he drew of his family, saying that although he knows the cat only has four legs he wanted to give Alex the cat more than eight legs.

Hillary Swiss, 5, painted a rainbow fish because she likes the story of the fish with rainbow scales.

And Nyle Weldon drew a dot-to-dot treasure map. Weldon, age 4, brought his brother Nicholas and his dad to see his artwork, which included an X to mark the treasure.

Nicholas Weldon said he thought his brother's artwork was "pretty good."

In celebration of the Week of the Young Child, April 23-29, the EMU Child Care and Development Center put up a display of artwork by children from their seven child care centers in the EMU art gallery. Families were invited to an open house on Sunday at the art gallery to see the work of all the aspiring artists.

The Children's Art display opened April 16 and will continue through April 28.

The display includes artwork of various media, including watercolors, collages, painting with ice cubes, wheel paintings and "gadget" paintings.

The young artists invited their families and friends to look at their work, recognizing friends from their child care programs and showing each other their masterpieces.

"Mommy, this is a fun art show," said one artist.

Father and University faculty member Ray Weldon agreed.

"It's nice to see all the things the kids did and they like to see their artwork put up on the wall," he said.
