With Jeremy Asher peering over the opposition's line again in the upcoming season, Gang Green could be set for another stingy football season.

DEFENSE

really represents... a hustle at every moment, with a pressure and onus on you that if you don't make the play, it won't be made.

"So if you have that feeling, you will always run full speed at the ball. That was a great theme. I like what they did, and I want to keep it the same."

Besides the new additions, the Ducks have a strong contingent of defensive players returning. Senior cornerback Alex Molden, who earned first-team all-league honors as a junior last season, promises to build on his success and, according to his coach, looks to be an All-American candidate.

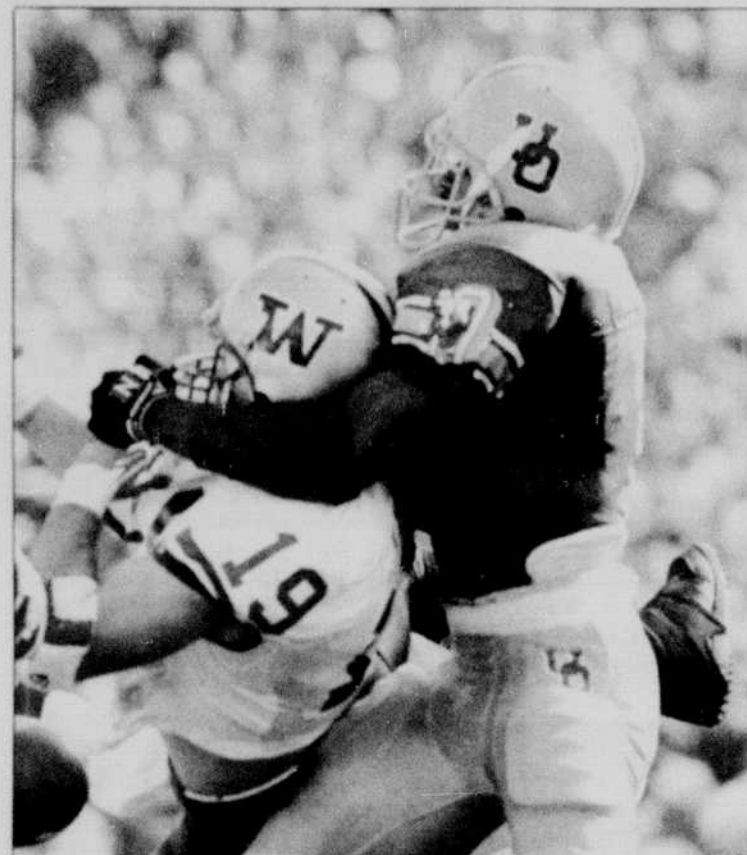

"I feel I had a pretty good junior year," Molden said. "I'm looking forward to that to prove that I can have a better year. I'm going to gear up for it in the off season."

"Alex is a legitimate All-American candidate, as Kenny should be too," Waters said of Molden and Wheaton. "I'm really impressed with Kenny Wheaton at the corner."

The Ducks are solid at the inside linebacker position as seniors Jeremy Asher and Rich Ruhl each return with 100-plus tackle seasons.

But the defensive line looks to be particularly strong, as Waters was impressed with both senior Troy Bailey, who started 13 games and recorded 15 tackles and four-and-a-half quarterback sacks last year, and junior Mark Schmidt, who recorded eight tackles and five sacks himself.

"They have been tremendous," Molden said of the defensive line. "Those guys have been causing havoc for the offense."

Part of the defense's success, Waters said, is due to its speed, not only at the corners, but throughout the squad.

"Overall, our defensive team speed is pretty good across the board," Waters said. "That is a definite strength, so we need to bring it. We need to utilize that speed and put pressure on the offenses."

"Hopefully teams won't have the time to figure out what we are doing and start abusing us, but we have plans if that does happen."

According to Molden, the team possesses what it takes to carry last season's success over into next fall.

"This is not going to be the type of defense that just because we lose a couple of guys that the whole defense is going to fall apart," Molden said. "It's not going to happen like that. I expect us to be up there — No. 1 or No. 2 this year — in the Pac-10 defenses."
