Blackballed player dead

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Glenn Burke, a Los Angeles Dodgers and Oakland Athletics outfielder who said he was blackballed from baseball for being gay, has died of AIDS-related complications at 42.

Burke died Tuesday night at a San Leandro hospital after being admitted Friday, said Pam Pitts, director of administration for the Athletics.

Although Burke had spent time in San Quentin prison and on San Francisco's streets in recent years, he was cared for in his last months at his sister's home and surrounded by family, Pitts said.

Burke, who played at 215 pounds from 1976-79, was down to 135 pounds by last fall, said Erik Sherman, who worked with Burke on an upcoming book.

Burke made his mark in baseball when he delivered what is believed to be the first high-five in sports during the Dodgers' 1977 World Series season.

But his promise in baseball was never fully realized given what Burke said were "prejudiced and homophobic" managers and bias in front offices around the league.

"Being black and gay made me tougher," Burke told The Associated Press in October. "I had to be tough to make it" in baseball.

Burke's homosexuality was known within baseball although he did not come out publicly until 1982, two years after he left the game.

Billy Martin, then manager of the Athletics, told him, "I don't want no faggot on my team," Burke said, and the A's refused to sign him again.

The Dodgers had traded Burke to Oakland in 1978, after Burke turned down the Dodgers' offer of a free honeymoon if he would just get married.

Bully pitcher given boot by Braves

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — The Atlanta Braves on Wednesday released Earl Nelson, the Durham Bulls pitcher who kicked a player in the head during a brawl that broke out during "Strike Out Domestic Violence" night at the park.

"The Atlanta Braves and the Durham Bulls do not condone this behavior, and we want people to know that," Bulls manager Matt West said.

Videotapes of the May 22 fight, which followed a beanball battle between the two clubs, showed Nelson kicking Winston-Salem's Glen Cullop in the head.

Cullop suffered a concussion, a broken jaw and five missing teeth, requiring surgery and a three-night hospital stay. He is expected to remain on the disabled list for at least a month.

Nelson had been suspended from play and fined a reported $300 by the league for his part in the melee. Forty-eight other players were suspended for a record 124 games and more than $6,000 in fines.

"I think the Bulls and the entire baseball industry learned a lot from this incident," Bulls general manager Peter Anlyan said.

CBA coach of year goes to Skyforce

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) — The man who coached the Yakima Sun Kings to a 1995 title has been hired to coach the Sioux Falls Skyforce, officials announced Wednesday.

Morris "Mo" McHone, the 1995 Continental Basketball Association coach of the year, had a 63-40 record in a season and a half with the Sun Kings.

He replaces Flip Saunders, who was named general manager of the Minnesota Timberwolves.

McHone was head coach of the San Antonio Spurs of the NBA for three years and was an assistant coach for the Cleveland Cavaliers for two years.

"He brings a wealth of experience to Sioux Falls," Skyforce spokesman Tommy Smith said.

Former Tri-City Chinook coach Calvin Duncan was expected to be named the new Yakima coach Thursday. Duncan was the 1994 CBA coach of the year and became available when the Tri-City franchise folded earlier this month.
