Disconnected 'Batman' superficial, commercial

Dannie Helm

For the Oregon Daily Emerald

"Holey rusted metal Batman!" Batman Forever, starring Val Kilmer, Nicole Kidman, Tommy Lee Jones and Jim Carrey, was definitely full of holes — and a let-down.

The movie is superficial and loosely connected. The addition of Robin is fairly well handled, and Chris O'Donnell does a competent job with his material.

Jim Carrey certainly steals the show, and the Riddler's character is better fleshed out than that of Two Face. Tommy Lee Jones did a good job with this rather lacking, one-dimensional character.

The soundtrack is inferior to the first two, except for the designed-to-be Top-40 hits by Seal and U2, which aren't heard until the end credits. The film was obviously geared towards merchandising.

So, if you have to go see it before it's released on video, check it out for the sets, special effects and the Riddler.

Summer's not just for blockbusters

Anne Moser-Kornfeld

Oregon Daily Emerald

The summer movie season has hit full swing with the openings of Batman Forever, Congo and a deluge of family-oriented films including Apollo 13.

One reviewer said Apollo 13 "is a success from lift-off to splash down" but a critic from the Salt Lake Tribune asked, "are you beginning to think that Hollywood isn't even trying anymore?"

Batman Forever and the rest may be old news to some movie die-hards, but to those who don't spend every waking moment of summer vacation in a movie theater, consider these films as reasons to go and see a hot new summer flick:

Crumb — a documentary about underground cartoonist Robert Crumb plays late night at the Bijou.

The Incredibly True Adventures of Two Girls in Love — a FineLine production opening soon, which critics describe as a movie audiences will laugh at in the beginning but will laugh with by the end of the film.

And of course anyone looking for a mainstream movie wouldn't want to miss Nine Months, which stars Hugh Grant and opens Wednesday.
