ASUO Exec is the height of fashion

■ ATTITUDE: For Jennifer Williamson, 'it's all about being functional'

By Anne Moser-Kornfeld
Entertainment Editor

ASUO President Jennifer Williamson, who admits to owning a pair of Birkenstocks she hardly wears, believes what a student wears is important. Williamson spoke in a recent Emerald interview, about fashion and what the campus community can expect from a student administrator whose main goal is to remain accessible.

Q. What do you say to someone who makes an issue over how you dress?

A. I'm a student, I represent students. I dress like a student. I'm not going to change that because that's only going to alienate me from the people I'm supposed to represent. If I'm always walking around in a suit and heels, then nobody's going to talk to me.

Q. Does what you wear have any effect on your attitude toward your own sense of personal power?

A. I don't wear anything that is restrictive. For me, wearing a dress is generally like wearing shorts. I rarely wear high-heels because I can't walk in them. I think about where I am going and all those issues women think about all the time.

Q. Do you have any style or signature look?

A. No, but all my roommates I've ever had have commented on my obsession with knee-highs and pleated skirts.

Q. What do you look for when you buy clothes?

A. I buy things that I like. You've got your body size. You wear what looks good on you. I'm really into being comfortable.

Q. What's thrift shopping like for you?

A. I grew up in a family where shopping at Goodwill and garage sales happened. But the prices at Goodwills are getting a lot higher because of those evil dealers. The stores like Antrican that go through and pilfer Goodwills take anything that is really cool and then jack up the prices. Big Bang in Portland is notorious for this. They sell things that are used for $40.

Q. What about the malls?

A. I have an Express card. It's the only card I have besides my VISA. I love cheap shoes. I don't shop that often at malls.

Q. Will the ASUO president position change your attitude toward clothes?

A. I've gotten to a point where it doesn't bother me if I dress more conservatively, where two years ago it would have. When I'm in a room with a bunch of student body presidents there's definitely a difference. I think I am more laid back.

Q. What is your relationship with co-president with Zachary Kelton?

A. Where formality needs to happen, I always have Zach to fall back on. We complement each other very well.

Q. How do you see yourself in relation to University administrators?

A. I don't feel like I have to maintain an image other than wanting them to respect me and I think they do because they know I'm going to tell it to them straight.

Q. How important is fashion to students?

A. It all depends on the circles you run in. It also depends on the time of term. It's important to traditional students for the first time out of the house, they can wear whatever they want.

MELODY CONROY/Emerald
President Jennifer Williamson, outside of the ASUO's EMU office, is 'into being comfortable.'

After you've defined yourself, it's all about being functional.

Q. How do you respond to someone judging you based on your appearance?

A. I would challenge a face-off of resumes on student issues for anyone who doesn't take me seriously based on what I'm wearing.

Q. What is one of the important features you intend to stress doing your term?

A. I would love to spend all day gabbing with people. I feel like I'm really accessible.

Q. Is fashion more important to women than men?

A. Not at all. The guys I know think just as much about clothing; they just don't talk about it.

Q. Do you have any fashion tips for the fall?

A. We want the ASUO staff to be recognizable so the staff has bought T-shirts. We're also selling them at the street faire in October for fundraising. The first time the ASUO will wear the T-shirts is when we move freshmen into the dorms.
