debt increases. She also called Washington to tell her representative how financial aid has affected her and her family.

"My brother is financially independent and he would have a really hard time going to school without financial aid,"

she said. "It is really important that we keep financial aid. I was glad that the person I talked to seemed supportive."

Lee said 50 percent of the students in Oregon receive some form of financial aid and all of them could be affected by the proposed financial aid cuts.
