Women: Competitors plagued with injuries

each other many times in their collegiate careers and have almost a 50-50 record in head-to-head competition.

"On any given day I could beat her and on any given day she could beat me," said Jenna Carlson, who has placed either first or second in every Oregon race this season. "I draw strength from her when we face each other in meets. Up in Seattle, when we were leading the race together, it reminded me of training together in Eugene this summer."

Neither the Washington squad or the Duck team will be 100 percent healthy going into the Drenth meet, however. The Huskies have several players suffering from illness and assorted bumps and bruises. Oregon will be without senior All-American Milena Glusac, who is still suffering from a fatigue-inducing sickness. Glusac only practiced sparingly this week, and Oregon coaches still don't really know the particulars about her condition.

Oregon senior Melody Fairchild is still favoring a sprained knee she injured a couple of weeks ago and sophomore Christie Engesser is not completely healthy going into Saturday's meet. But both will run at the Drenth meet.

For Oregon running fans, this weekend will be the only opportunity to see the team in action. The Duck runners look forward to competing in front of family and friends, as well.

"I'm looking forward to finally having a home meet," said Carlson. "There's something to be said about sleeping in my own bed and not having to travel. We will have a definite advantage over Washington because we have been training on the Drenth course all week and we know the surface conditions. Having fans cheer for us will also be a boost."

"I haven't run well in Eugene earlier (in my career). Hopefully I will do better this weekend and have a positive experience."
